owned no part of the mortgaged property cannot complain of a wrongful foreclosure.³² However, it has been held that in those jurisdictions in which the mortgagee is regarded as having an absolute legal title after default and possession taken, and in which the procedure at law and in equity is distinct, the mortgagor's only remedy for a wrongful foreclosure sale is by a bill in equity for redemption with an accounting for the reasonable value of the property if it is injured or destroyed or is for any reason unavailable for redemption.³³ So, where the mortgagee is rightfully in possession, he cannot, while the mortgage remains unredeemed, be charged as for a conversion by reason of any irregularity in the subsequent proceeding for sale.³⁴ Where the provisions of the statute or mortgage as to sale are not substantially complied with and have not been waived, the mortgagor is entitled to have the value of the property applied to the mortgage debt and, if the value exceeds the debt, to recover the difference from the mortgagee;³⁵ the purchaser becomes subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee, and is to be regarded and treated as an equitable assignee of the security to secure him for the purchase money paid by him and applied on the payment of the mortgagor's debt.³⁶ Where the mortgagee bids in the property at the sale, the mortgagor and the mortgagee stand in the same position as before the sale in case the sale is invalid.³⁷ If the mortgagor elects to regard the foreclosure as invalid he cannot recover the value of the property without accounting for the amount owing on the mortgage.³⁸ Where the mortgagee after bidding in the property credits the amount realized on the mortgage debt and then sells the property and assigns the remaining portion of the debt to the purchaser, the purchaser cannot be regarded as a stranger to the mortgage, and in an action by the mortgagor against him to recover the value of the property the mortgagor is entitled to recover only the excess, if any, in the value of the property over the indebtedness.³⁹ So, where there is an invalid foreclosure and the property is bid in by an assignee of the mortgage, he is entitled to be credited with the amount paid by him in trover by a purchaser of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor.⁴⁰

The damages should be determined as in an action for conversion,⁴¹ considered generally supra § 226, the measure of damages being the excess of the actual value of the property at the time of sale over the mortgage debt,⁴² and the reasonable market rental value of the property during the period it was wrongfully held before its sale.⁴³ However, a mortgagee who obtains possession of the mortgaged property under an order of delivery in a replevin suit and sells it is liable, on the determination of the issues in the replevin suit against him, for the value of the property at the time of the service of the order of delivery with interest from that date and not for damages for detention of the property.⁴⁴ The market value of the property sold

Debt not extinguished

If mortgagee sells unfairly or irregularly, the consequence is, not that the debt becomes extinguished, but that the mortgagor may be credited with payment up to the value of the property.—Harrison v. Hall, 145 N.E. 737, 239 N.Y. 51, reversing 202 N.Y.S. 626, 207 App.Div. 511.—Goodman v. Schulman, 258 N.Y.S. 681, 144 Misc. 512.

Irrespective of limitations

In suit on notes secured by chattel mortgage which mortgagee attempted to foreclose by public instead of private sale, as provided, bidding off property for itself, mortgagors were entitled to have value of property applied in payment of notes as of date when property was taken, irrespective of lapse of time which would bar a claim for an excess.—Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Action by second mortgagee

In an action by a second mortgagee for wrongful foreclosure and sale by the first mortgagee, the second mortgagee is entitled to recover the difference between the market value of the mortgaged property on the day of the foreclosure sale and the amount of the first mortgagee's lien thereon.—Castro v. Linchitz, Mass., 8 N.E.2d 744.

43. Tex.—Trehan v. Dunnigan, Civ. App., 297 S.W. 1102.

Improper items

The value of the property by the hour or day or the amount the mortgagor could earn per day by using it in his occupation is not a proper measure of damages for its detention.—Trehan v. Dunnigan, supra.

is to be determined as of the time and place of the sale,⁴⁵ but should not include its value for use in place on the premises where the purchaser does not have the right to use it thereon.⁴⁶

Motive. If, in the foreclosure proceedings, the mortgagee acts wholly within his legal rights, his motive in foreclosing the mortgage is unimportant.⁴⁷

Private sale. Since, as appears supra § 373, the mortgagee in selling the mortgaged property must sell it fairly and for an adequate price, a mortgagee who sells at private sale is responsible and accountable for at least the fair and reasonable value of the property, regardless of the price actually received by him,⁴⁸ so that if the property is wrongfully sold at private sale the measure of damages is the difference between the price realized and the actual value of the property, or the excess of the value of the property above the mortgage debt.⁴⁹

Election of remedies. If the mortgagee takes possession of, and claims title to, the property in pursuance of a sale collusively or improperly made to himself, the mortgagor can elect to treat the sale as valid and hold the mortgagee to account for the excess produced over the mortgage debt, or he can disregard the sale and proceed for the value of the property over and above the debt and interest.⁵⁰ Where the sale is to a third person he may treat the sale as invalid and sue the mortgagee for an accounting and for the value of the property in excess of the mortgage debt, recovering in no event the value of the property without accounting for the amount due on the mortgage debt, or he may sue the purchaser to redeem the property by tendering to him a sum sufficient to pay his claim against the property.⁵¹

Procedure. In an action for wrongful foreclosure of the mortgage the general rules of pleading⁵² and evidence⁵³ apply. Similarly in action for

52. Petition held sufficient

(1) Petition failing to allege compliance with all statutory requirements as to notice before and after sale.—McMahel v. Smith, 258 Ill.App. 53.

(2) Petition, although unsuccessfully attacking foreclosure proceeding, entitled petitioner to come into equity, enjoin proceeding at law, and set up his defenses therein, where petition showed that defendant's acts prevented petitioner from pursuing his remedy at law by affidavit of illegality, although defendant removed obstacle to filing of illegality after petition was filed, since equity, having acquired jurisdiction, will retain it, and failure to retain jurisdiction would throw cost of suit, which defendant compelled petitioner to file, on petitioner.—Simpson v. Jones, 136 S.E. 558, 182 Ga. 544.

Petition held insufficient

(1) To state cause of action for trespass by reason of removal of mortgaged property from petitioner's premises, where foreclosure proceedings were not void for any reason assigned.—Simpson v. Jones, supra.

(2) To state cause of action for damages for malfeasance, misfeasance, and nonfeasance in conducting auction sale.—Van Mourick v. Bowie, 69 F.2d 834, 63 App.D.C. 96.

(3) In action for statutory penalty special plea which shows that the property was not taken to foreclose the mortgage is subject to demurrer on the ground that the plea amounts to the general issue.—McMahel v. Smith, 258 Ill.App. 53.

Tender of payment

In action for wrongful seizing plaintiff's business, including property used therein and appropriating it to defendant's use after inducing plaintiff to omit installments on note secured by chattel mortgage on truck, plaintiff was not bound to tender omitted installments in complaint.—Kaller v. Spady, 24 P.2d 351, 144 Or. 206.

Waiver

In a proceeding for a statutory penalty arising from the failure to comply with the statutory requirements as to notice before and after sale, a plea purporting to set up a waiver of those requirements should confess the cause of action alleged and then allege matters avoiding the effect thereof.—McMahel v. Smith, 258 Ill.App. 53.

Issues

Pleadings did not raise issue that foreclosure of chattel mortgages was premature.—Stotts v. Carney, 242 P. 675, 78 Colo. 472.

Proof

As against general issue, plaintiff

must prove foreclosure in action for statutory penalty.—McMahel v. Smith, 258 Ill.App. 53.

53. Burden of proof

(1) Burden of proving defendant mortgagee's bad faith in seizing and selling the property was held to be on plaintiffs.—In re Nuccio's Will, 195 N.Y.S. 593, 202 App.Div. 108—11 C.J. p 717 note 69 [f].

(2) Burden of proving that notice of foreclosure sale was not given was held to be on plaintiff.—Bailey v. Diamond T. Motor Car Co., 255 Ill.App. 447.

(3) Burden is on mortgagee to prove that private sale, made contrary to statute and without the consent of the mortgagor, was openly and fairly conducted and that the price paid was not so inadequate as to raise a presumption of bad faith.—Tacker v. Mitchell, 3 Tenn.App. 495.

Evidence held admissible

Evidence tending to show that defendant made no charge for taking, keeping, or selling truck, offered as tending to show that the notice of sale was sufficient.—Bailey v. Diamond T. Motor Car Co., 255 Ill.App. 447.

Evidence held inadmissible or properly excluded

(1) Where mortgagee relied on waste as justifying foreclosure on stock of merchandise and fixtures, evidence that store was closed for about eleven days, in absence of evidence that any of the mortgaged property deteriorated, although part of it was perishable.—Rosenthal v. Newman, 141 N.E. 118, 246 Mass. 389.

(2) Evidence that plaintiffs worked hard and tried to do the best they wrongful foreclosure, the general rules of trial apply.⁵⁴

§ 394. — Title of Purchaser

Subject to express statutory provisions and the effect of notice of irregularity or fraud to the purchaser, a purchaser of mortgaged property sold under a power of sale in the mortgage ordinarily obtains good title even though there was an irregularity in the execution of the power of sale.

A sale under a power contained in a chattel mortgage ordinarily is not invalidated as against a purchaser for value by an irregularity in the execution of the power of sale.⁵⁵ However, where a statute provides that a sale not in conformity with its provisions shall pass no title, it must be given effect in accordance with its terms.⁵⁶ Similarly, one who purchases at a private sale, with notice that a public sale is required by the terms of the mortgage, takes no title as against the mortgagor and those claiming under him;⁵⁷ and where a mortgage sale is conducted in such a manner as to be in fraud of creditors, the purchaser, if he participates in such fraud, takes no title.⁵⁸ Where a tenant in common mortgages his interest in personalty, a purchaser of the whole property, with notice of the rights of the mortgagor's cotenants who retain possession, is liable for conversion.⁵⁹

§ 395. — Extinguishment of Lien

Although there is some authority to the contrary, in general a valid mortgage is not extinguished by an irregular sale.

In some jurisdictions, particularly where a statute so provides,⁶⁰ where the mortgagee takes possession of the property for the purpose of foreclosing and sells the property without a substantial compliance with the statute,⁶¹ or the terms of the mortgage,⁶² his lien is extinguished; but the more generally accepted rule is that a valid mortgage is not extinguished by an irregular sale, and that the purchaser succeeds to the rights of the mortgagee.⁶³ So, where the mortgagee took possession under the

(3) That foreclosing mortgage of restaurant equipment put mortgagor out of business, on question of bad faith or of special damage.—Loza v. Osmola, 181 N.E. 125, 279 Mass. 220.

Evidence held sufficient

(1) To warrant finding of conspiracy between mortgagee and third person to foreclose mortgage on laundry equipment, and to deprive mortgagors, absent from state, of their interest therein.—Wettlin v. Jones, 234 P. 515, 32 Wyo. 446, rehearing denied 236 P. 246, 236 P. 247, 32 Wyo. 446.

(2) Evidence held sufficient for submission to jury on question of whether mortgaged automobile on which there was default in payment under mortgage was fairly sold.—Clark v. Studebaker Corporation of America, 171 N.E. 602, 35 Ohio App. 54.

(3) Evidence that horse and wagon were wrongfully taken from owner when needed to make crop and sold under execution on mortgage and note secured thereby established damages.—Polito v. Ferraro, La.App., 155 So. 477.

Evidence held insufficient

(1) To support finding that defendant had no occasion to deem security unsafe.—In re Nuccio's Will, 195 N.Y.S. 593, 202 App.Div. 108.

(2) To show fraud or deceit in foreclosure of chattel mortgage which provided that mortgagee could sell mortgaged sheep at any time he felt himself unsafe and insecure.

—Ramstetter v. MacGinnis, 68 P.2d 454, 100 Colo. 494.

(3) To show conspiracy to commit wrongful act.—Antoine v. Commonwealth Trust Co., 165 N.E. 12, 266 Mass. 202.

(4) Small number of bidders, possibly inadequate sum from sale, and failure to give notice by publication, where option to give written notice existed, is insufficient to show bad faith in foreclosing chattel mortgage.—Loza v. Osmola, 181 N.E. 125, 279 Mass. 220.

(5) Certificate filed after foreclosure sale by purchaser of property, in connection with the formation of a new corporation which stated the value of the property purchased to be an amount more than twice the sale price, is insufficient to show bad faith or negligence in foreclosing mortgage.—Antoine v. Commonwealth Trust Co., supra.

54. Instructions

(1) Refusal to instruct to find for defendants if plaintiff did not tender omitted installments before foreclosure, after receiving defendants' attorney's letter that he was instructed to foreclose, is not error where defendant induced plaintiff to omit payments on mortgage.—Kaller v. Spady, 24 P.2d 351, 144 Or. 206.

Where first chattel mortgagee takes property without mortgagor's objection and sells without foreclosing mortgage in legal manner, purchaser takes subject to second mortgage recorded prior to sale, and, after default, second chattel mortgagee may sue purchaser at sale by first chattel mortgagee not complying with statutes, for possession to foreclose mortgage.—*Parks v. terms of his mortgage at the time of its execution, he does not lose his right to possession through the invalidity of a foreclosure sale at which he became the purchaser.⁶⁴ Further, a void foreclosure does not affect the title acquired by the mortgagee on breach of condition by the mortgagor.⁶⁵ However, the proceeds of a fraudulent sale for an inadequate price by a prior mortgagee will be treated as a voluntary payment in satisfaction of the prior mortgagee's lien, which leaves the lien of the subsequent mortgagee unimpaired.⁶⁶

§ 396. — Setting Aside Sale

Although a sale properly made under a mortgage will not be set aside, if it is prematurely made or is characterized by fraud or oppression it may be set aside. On a resale the purchaser at the first sale is entitled to bid and to apply on the purchase price the amount paid by him on the first sale.

A sale under a mortgage will not be set aside in equity, where the terms of the power of sale are pursued and no fraud or oppression is shown; but a sale which is prematurely made, or which is characterized by fraud or oppression,⁶⁷ may be set aside. If a sale was under a trust deed, it can be set aside only by a direct proceeding in a court of equity.⁶⁸ Where a sale on foreclosure is set aside and a resale ordered, the purchaser at the invalid sale should be permitted to bid at the resale, and to apply on the purchase price as much of the sum paid by him on the first purchase as remained after deducting what he received from sales of the property while in his hands.⁶⁹

§ 397. — Waiver of Irregularities

A mortgagor or those holding under him, including a subsequent mortgagee, may waive irregularities in the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property.

If the mortgagor knowingly consents to, participates in, or ratifies a wrongful sale of the mortgaged property,⁷⁰ as where he purchases from the mortgagee a part of the chattels, which the latter had bought at the sale, or accepts from the mortgagee a voluntary payment of the difference between the amount of the debt and what the mortgagee realized from the chattels purchased at the sale,⁷¹ all irregularities are waived and the sale is equivalent to a foreclosure in proper form. However, it has been held that it is not a waiver that the mortgagor is present at the sale without objecting,⁷² or assents to a credit of the amount realized at the sale,⁷³ or accepts the surplus proceeds of the sale from the mortgagee,⁷⁴ or that he made no objection to the removal of the property and pointed out its location.⁷⁵ The purchaser may also be precluded by his conduct from attacking the validity of the sale,⁷⁶ and as between the junior and the senior mortgagee, the former may be estopped to object to the invalidity of the sale.⁷⁷ The mere fact that the mortgagor requested additional time after the sale in which to make redemption does not constitute a ratification of an illegal sale.⁷⁸ A second chattel mortgagee who through agents participates in the sale under the first mortgage is estopped to dispute the title acquired at the sale, even though the holder of the first mortgage is the purchaser.⁷⁹ It is not necessary that a mortgagor challenging the validity of the foreclosure bring his action for relief prior to the sale.⁸⁰

C. ACTIONS TO FORECLOSE

§ 398. In General

Generally, actions to foreclose mortgages are cognizable in equity.

A mortgage may be foreclosed by action, even though it does not contain a power of sale.⁸¹

While the form of procedure is sometimes regulated by statutes,⁸² under which an ordinary foreclosure proceeding is sometimes made an action at law,⁸³ proceedings to foreclose a mortgage are properly cognizable in equity,⁸⁴ a question belonging thereto being presented,⁸⁵ as where there are successive encumbrances;⁸⁶ and the court may transfer such cause from the law to the equity side of the docket of its own motion.⁸⁷ The fact that a remedy at law exists, unless such remedy is adequate, will not debar equitable relief of this nature,⁸⁸ but, where the legal remedy of foreclosure is adequate, a mortgage cannot be foreclosed in equity.⁸⁹ A defendant cannot, by demanding legal damages, divest the court of equitable jurisdiction to foreclose.⁹⁰

Although it has been held that, if a mortgage fails to express the intention of the parties, it should be reformed in some tribunal having jurisdiction to grant such relief before attempting to foreclose it,⁹¹ a mortgage may be foreclosed by a suit in equity without a separate suit first being brought to reform the mortgage so as to correct a mistake in the description of the indebtedness secured, the reformation being granted as part of the relief in the foreclosure suit if the pleadings justify it,⁹² and, where a note secured by the mortgage is not paid or discharged, although returned to the maker by mistake, the holder may foreclose according to the terms of the mortgage without preliminary action in equity.⁹³ However, a verbal agreement to execute a mortgage cannot be enforced by a suit seeking specific performance and foreclosure.⁹⁴

Nature of proceeding. A foreclosure suit in its usual form is partly an action in rem, for the seizure and sale of the property, and partly an action

C. I. T. Corporation, supra.

Revival by short order proceeding

Alternative aspects

A bill may have equity to foreclose a mortgage on land and personally, even though treated as a chattel mortgage because of ambiguity in the description of the realty, although it seeks a reformation of such description.—Reeves v. Thompson, 142 So. 663, 225 Ala. 204, citing Corpus Juris.

Not special proceeding

A mortgage foreclosure suit is an equitable action and not a special proceeding.—Schmaling v. Johnston, 13 P.2d 1111, 54 Nev. 293, affirmed 27 P.2d 1059, 55 Nev. 164.

Inherently a matter of equity jurisdiction

In the absence of any controlling statute the foreclosure of a mortgage is inherently a matter of equity jurisdiction.—McCormick v. Hartley, 6 N.E. 357, 107 Ind. 248.

Issue of law

An action to foreclose a mortgage is a suit in equity and cannot be transformed into an action at law by merely raising an issue of law as a defense.—Gresens v. Martin, 145 N. W. 823, 27 N.D. 231.

Property in hands of defendant

Where creditor is secured by mortgage which passes legal title to him, he has adequate remedy at law, and, unless he can show that trust property or some part thereof is in hands of defendant, so that processes of court may reach property itself, or some part thereof, and foreclose thereon, courts of equity will not intervene.—Leeth Nat. in personam, for the ascertainment of the debt of the mortgage debtor, and obtaining a personal judgment against him,⁹⁵ and, where no personal judgment is sought, a suit to foreclose a mortgage is essentially a proceeding in rem.⁹⁶ However, a suit on a note and for foreclosure of a mortgage securing it has been held not a proceeding in rem, the foreclosure of the lien being merely incidental to the principal obligation.⁹⁷

§ 399. Conditions Precedent

It is sometimes a condition precedent to an action to foreclose a mortgage that the mortgagee make a demand for the amount due, file a notice of the intended foreclosure, file or deliver a verified statement of the account, or that a certain percentage of the mortgagee bondholders request a foreclosure.

A statute requiring a demand, where it relates only to summary foreclosure by notice and sale, is not applicable to foreclosure by action;⁹⁸ and after a breach of the conditions of the mortgage, whereby the right to an action to foreclose the same accrues, no demand is necessary as a preliminary to the suit,⁹⁹ but, where it is sought to foreclose a chattel mortgage, given to secure the payment of a note due on demand, the note and mortgage are to be considered and construed together, and a previous demand for payment is necessary.¹

In some jurisdictions a notice of the intended foreclosure must be recorded in a prescribed place and within a certain time, in order to foreclose a mortgage by action.² The notice need not be indexed, however,³ nor is it necessary to record the notice, if the mortgage is valid without being recorded.⁴

A mortgagee need not remove the property from the building in which it is installed, thus destroying its value in a substantial part in order merely to foreclose the mortgage.⁵ The jurisdiction of the court to render judgment is not conditioned on plaintiff's taking possession of the property under a warrant of seizure, notwithstanding such seizure is authorized by statute.⁶

Where a mortgagee procured an execution sale of chattels under a personal judgment on notes secured by a mortgage, he must refund the sale price with interest to the purchaser as a condition precedent to foreclosure of a mortgage on such chattels.⁷

Ascertainment or statement of amount due. A statute requiring the mortgagee to make and deliver to the mortgagor a verified statement of his account, showing each item, etc., has been held not applicable where the debt secured is a note on which no payment has been made;⁸ nor is it applicable where the chattel mortgage is additional security to a note secured by a mortgage on land, where the land is foreclosed leaving a deficiency,⁹ and such a requirement may be waived.¹⁰

It is not a condition precedent to an action to foreclose a mortgage, given to secure the performance of a contract, that the damages for breach of the contract should be ascertained, the foreclosure necessarily involving a determination as to the amount for which it should be awarded.¹¹

Request by bondholders. A provision that a foreclosure shall not be had until a certain portion of the mortgagee bondholders so request does not render the mortgage void.¹²

§ 400. Defenses

Generally, anything tending to defeat the mortgagee's right to foreclose may be set up as a defense to an action to foreclose, and in proper cases the mortgagor may interpose a set-off or counterclaim.

In the absence of an estoppel,¹³ anything tending to defeat the mortgagee's right to foreclose may be shown in defense to an action to foreclose.¹⁴ For example, it may be shown that the mortgagee is estopped to foreclose,¹⁵ that the mortgage debt has been discharged,¹⁶ or that the mortgage is invalid for nondelivery or for lack of acceptance by the mortgagee,¹⁷ for want or failure of consideration,¹⁸ or for fraud.¹⁹

It is no defense that the mortgagee has violated collateral promises to the mortgagor,²⁰ or that the goods covered by the mortgage did not correspond with the samples shown defendant,²¹ or that the chattel mortgage erroneously set up the giving of two instead of a single note to secure the debt,²² and a mortgagee of crops has been held not barred from foreclosing his mortgage by the mortgagor's want of title to the land and title outstanding in a third person not a party to the suit.²³

A settlement of the controversy by the mortgagor and the mortgagee will not bind other nonconsenting parties to the foreclosure suit.²⁴ Personal defenses can be interposed only by those whom they concern.²⁵ Also, the junior mortgagee cannot make defenses to the foreclosure of the senior mortgage, unless the matters set up in some way concern his rights.²⁶ In a proceeding by an assignee to foreclose the mortgage, all defenses which might have been urged against the mortgagee may be set up against his assignee.²⁷

Set-off and counterclaim. In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the mortgagor may generally offset against his indebtedness whatever damages he has sustained which have arisen out of the transaction involved.²⁸ While, in some jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, a claim for conversion has been held not a proper counterclaim in an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage,²⁹ in other jurisdictions the contrary rule prevails.³⁰ However, an injury to the credit of the mortgagor by the mortgagee's act, without right, in causing the property to be transferred to the mortgagee has been held not to constitute a basis for the recovery of damages by way of counterclaim; nor can the mortgagor counterclaim for speculative damages because of such act.³¹ A counterclaim for damages resulting from the commencement of the action, by taking over the property in the course of the suit, and by threats of suit, has been held improper as not existing at the commencement of the action.³²

§ 401. Jurisdiction and Venue

Generally an action to foreclose a mortgage may be brought in any court having equitable powers which has jurisdiction over the person of the mortgagor, provided the court has cognizance of such proceedings; and the statutes as to the venue of the action must be complied with.

A mortgage may be foreclosed by an action in a court of record;³³ and an equitable action to foreclose a mortgage may be brought in any court with equity powers which has jurisdiction over the person of the mortgagor without regard to the locus of the mortgaged property,³⁴ even though it is in a state other than that where the mortgage was executed.³⁵ The action must of course be brought in courts having cognizance of such proceedings, and in courts of inferior jurisdiction the power must have been specially conferred.³⁶ Under some statutes jurisdiction depends on the value of the property in controversy.³⁷

Venue. The requirements of the statutes as to the venue of the action must be complied with,³⁸ and the pleadings must contain sufficient averments of venue.³⁹ In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that such action must be brought in the county where the mortgage is filed,⁴⁰ or where the notes are payable,⁴¹ or where the property is situated;⁴² but, even though the statute authorizes the suit in the county where the property is situated, this does not necessarily confine the foreclosure proceeding to such venue.⁴³ The action may be brought in the county where defendant may be summoned⁴⁴ and in a court of equity, notwithstanding the statute provides for a foreclosure by an action at law in the county where the mortgage was filed.⁴⁵

§ 402. Limitations and Laches

The right to foreclose a chattel mortgage may be barred after the lapse of the period within which an action may be brought for the possession of the property or to collect the mortgage debt.

While it has been held that the mortgagee need not foreclose within a certain time after taking possession of the mortgaged chattel on condition broken,⁴⁶ on analogy to the statute of limitations, it has been held that the right to foreclose is barred after the lapse of the period within which an action at law may be brought for the possession of the property⁴⁷ or to collect the mortgage debt.⁴⁸ Conversely, the mortgagee is not barred by his laches in bringing a suit to foreclose, until his right to enforce payment of the debt has expired at law.⁴⁹ Where no time of payment is designated, the indebtedness is payable within a reasonable time and the mortgage must be foreclosed within a reasonable time.⁵⁰

The statutory period does not begin to run until the time of forfeiture,⁵¹ and not even after the forfeiture, as long as the possession of the mortgagor is permissive and not adverse to the rights of the mortgagee.⁵² However, it has also been held that delay for a shorter time tends to raise a presumption that the mortgage debt is satisfied.⁵³ Where the mortgage is payable by installments, the statute does not commence to run until the last installment falls due.⁵⁴ Where the maker of a note gives a chattel mortgage to indemnify a surety and subsequently transfers the property to a corporation organized to take over his business, the statute of limitations does not run in favor of the corporation, by

Property temporarily in another state

The passing of title to personal property to a mortgagee for breach of condition of the mortgage, confirmed by decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, was no less effective with respect to a locomotive engine which constituted a part of the property because at the time of such passing of title the engine, which was in use in the interstate business of the mortgagor, chanced to be temporarily in another state than that of its permanent situs and where it was owned, and it was not thereafter subject to attachment in the foreign state by creditors of the mortgagor.—*North Carolina Land, etc., Co. v. reason of its holding the property, as against the right of the payee to enforce the mortgage,⁵⁵ since the mere possession and use of the property by the corporation in such case is not inconsistent with the terms and legal effect of the mortgage.⁵⁶

Limitation as to credits. The lapse of time may preclude defendant from setting up a claim for alleged credits.⁵⁷

§ 403. Parties

Generally, all persons interested in the mortgaged property are proper parties to a foreclosure action; and such persons may intervene provided they come within the rules, if any, relating thereto laid down by statute.

In a proceeding in equity to foreclose a chattel mortgage all persons interested in the property should be made parties⁵⁸ and are proper parties.⁵⁹ The original beneficiary in a trust deed is not a proper party where he has parted with his interest in the deed.⁶⁰

The discussion as to what persons are entitled to foreclose a chattel mortgage will be found supra § 355.

Defendants. The general rule in regard to parties defendant is that all persons against whom the mortgagee seeks judgment are necessary parties to an action to foreclose,⁶¹ and every person who claims a part of the property in his own right and holds possession thereof is properly joined as defendant.⁶² The mortgagor, if he retains an interest in the property, is a necessary party defendant;⁶³ but the mortgagor is not a necessary party where he has parted with his entire interest in the property,⁶⁴ unless it is intended to enforce personal liability on the debt against the mortgagor⁶⁵ or his assignee.⁶⁶ If husband and wife executed the mortgage, the wife is a necessary party;⁶⁷ and plaintiff may join as defendants those liable on different notes secured by the same chattel mortgage, even though the mortgage is not executed by all of the defendants.⁶⁸

While purchasers of the mortgagor's equity in the chattels mortgaged are not only always proper parties,⁶⁹ but usually necessary parties as well,⁷⁰ it has also been held that such a purchaser is not a necessary party;⁷¹ and it has been held that the mortgagee has no duty to make one renting the chattels with knowledge of the pending foreclosure a party to the action.⁷²

Subsequent encumbrancers are proper but not

Mortgage of membership in association

Since a membership in the Western Associated Press can, under its by-laws, only be sold to publishers of newspapers, and a transfer of such membership would not entitle the transferee to the privileges of a member, unless voluntarily accorded him by the association, a bill will not be entertained to foreclose a mortgage on a certificate of membership in such association unless the necessary parties;⁷³ and the same distinction has been made in regard to creditors of the mortgagor and public officers who have seized the mortgaged property on execution,⁷⁴ and persons who have wrongfully converted the mortgaged property to their own use.⁷⁵ Also, a prior lienholder,⁷⁶ or a prior encumbrancer who has authorized the mortgagor to execute a subsequent mortgage,⁷⁷ is not a necessary party.

It is both unnecessary and improper to join as parties defendant persons who have no interest in the mortgaged property and who cannot be affected by a decree in the proceeding.⁷⁸ It has also been held that guarantors of the debt are not proper parties to the action.⁷⁹ So, where the mortgage notes have been transferred by an indorsement imposing liability on the payee only after all security has been exhausted, the payee is not a proper defendant in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage.⁸⁰

*tion to foreclose are not necessary parties.*⁸¹

Intervention. Where the right to intervene is regulated by statute, third persons must be within the meaning thereof in order to be entitled to intervene,⁸² and one renting the mortgaged chattels from the mortgagor with knowledge of the foreclosure suit has a duty to intervene and set up whatever right he may have acquired.⁸³ Claimants of the mortgaged property, whether claiming as owners⁸⁴ or as attaching,⁸⁵ judgment,⁸⁶ or other lien,⁸⁷ creditors, may intervene in an action to foreclose; but general creditors cannot do so,⁸⁸ unless in a case where it is alleged that the foreclosure is collusive.⁸⁹ A junior encumbrancer may also be made a party to a foreclosure suit on his own application,⁹⁰ under proper circumstances,⁹¹ but after final decree an order requiring plaintiff to add new parties is irregular.⁹²

The intervenor is not entitled to litigate any question pending between the other parties,⁹³ and

ing that in an action to recover real or personal property, or to enforce a lien thereon, "any person claiming a right to or interest in the property or its proceeds" may intervene, one who seeks to set aside a deed to land cannot intervene in an action brought by the grantee to enforce a chattel mortgage executed to secure the rent accruing on a lease of the land executed by him, although the prayer of the intervening petition be that the rent be adjudged to the intervenor.—Vanmeter v. § 404. Process and Appearance Personal service or service by publication, in accordance with statutes relating thereto, is sufficient in an action to foreclose a mortgage.

Where, by statute it is required that personal service of notice of the intention of the parties to institute a suit be made on the mortgagor, it is sufficient to hand the mortgagor a copy of the notice.⁹⁵ Where the suit is essentially one, in rem, as shown supra § 398, service by publication, when allowed by statute, is sufficient.⁹⁶ A citation and the officers' returns are not rendered defective by inclosing in parentheses a direction to deliver a certified copy of the petition to the named defendants.⁹⁷ Where the statute does not so require, notice of the proceedings need not be given the mortgagor at the time of issuing execution.⁹⁸

§ 405. Pleading

- a. Bill or complaint
- b. Plea, answer, or cross complaint
- c. Amended and supplemental pleadings; bill of particulars
- d. Issues, proof, and variance

a. Bill or Complaint

The bill or complaint must allege every fact necessary to entitle plaintiff to relief, including the ownership of the debt, breach of the condition of the mortgage, and a description of the property, and must contain a prayer for relief.

In accordance with general rules, the bill or complaint must allege every fact necessary to entitle plaintiff to relief,⁹⁹ by direct averment,¹ although the fair and reasonable intendment of pleading will be allowed,² especially where objection is not made at the proper time.³ The mortgage should be copied in the petition or its effect should be set up,⁴ and it should be alleged that the mortgage debt is due and unpaid,⁵ and that there has been a default in the performance of the condition of the mortgage,⁶ unless foreclosure is sought under an insecurity clause.⁷ It is not necessary for plaintiff to anticipate the defenses of defendant.⁸

11 C.J. p 724 note 6.

7. Alaska.—Harry Gong & Co. v. Mt. Baker Packing Co., 7 Alaska 1.

Grounds of belief

Where, under an insecurity clause, the mortgagee seeks to foreclose before the maturity of the mortgage, it has been held not necessary that he set forth in his complaint the grounds of his belief that he is insecure.—Harry Gong & Co. v. Mt. Baker Packing Co., 7 Alaska 1.

8. Tex.—Blount v. Payne, Civ.App., 187 S.W. 990.

Record and notice. Compliance with recording acts must be averred where essential to the validity of the mortgage,⁹ for example, it must be shown that the mortgage was recorded in the proper county,¹⁰ and, where the mortgage is not recorded as required by statute, foreclosure cannot be maintained against the purchaser of the property unless facts showing that he had actual or constructive notice of the mortgage are alleged.¹¹ As between the parties, however, it is not necessary to allege that the mortgage was registered.¹²

Description of property. A bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage should show of what the property consists,¹³ and the mortgagor's title, or claim of title, to it,¹⁴ but the pleadings need not state the value of the property.¹⁵ While it has been stated that the bill should show that the property is within the jurisdiction of the court,¹⁶ in some states an equitable action to foreclose may be brought in any court having jurisdiction of the parties without regard to the locus of the mortgaged property, as shown supra § 401.

Right to sue. The bill must show that complainant is the owner of the debt secured,¹⁷ and, where complainant sues as assignee of the mortgage, he must set up the facts establishing his right to sue as such,¹⁸ including the manner in which he acquired title.¹⁹

Where a third person is joined as a person claiming an interest in the mortgaged property, his interest should plainly be shown by an appropriate averment.²⁰ So, where third persons are made parties to an action to foreclose, for the purpose of charging them with the value of the property, sufficient facts must be alleged to show the ground of their liability.²¹

Prayer for relief. The bill or complaint must contain a proper prayer for relief,²² although it has been held that the prayer need not necessarily contain the word "foreclosure."²³

A petition in intervention, setting forth a claim and asking to have the lien declared superior to plaintiff's, has been held to state a cause of action where the mortgage set up by plaintiff was void on its face as to intervenor.²⁴

b. Plea, Answer, or Cross Complaint

The plea or answer must state what defenses are to be relied on, and, where special damages are claimed by defendant, they must be pleaded in order to be recovered.

Where a bill to foreclose a mortgage sets out facts on which defendant's claim as owner is based, the issue may be determined on the general demurrer, and in such case defendant need not file an answer.²⁵ Ordinarily, however, the plea, answer, or cross complaint must state clearly and precisely which allegations of the petition or complaint it admits as true,²⁶ which ones are denied,²⁷ and what defenses are to be relied on,²⁸ for it is a well settled principle of law that no defense is available unless properly set up by pleadings;²⁹ and, where defendant claims special damages, they must be pleaded in order to be recovered.³⁰ Where absence of notice is relied on by purchasers, they must expressly deny notice;³¹ and the mortgagor cannot be credited with payments which he claims to have made on the mortgage debt unless such payments are properly pleaded.³² However, a defendant claiming an interest in property not covered by the mortgage is not obliged to allege or prove his ownership or to anticipate the entry of a decree ordering the sale of his property.³³

Where fraud, misrepresentation, or duress is relied on, the facts constituting the same must be pleaded;³⁴ and, while the pleading is to be most strongly construed against the pleader, the language is to be interpreted fairly and in accordance with the intent of the pleader if that intent is to be gathered from a reasonable construction of the language used.³⁵

A set-off must, under the rules of equity practice, be pleaded by way of a cross bill;³⁶ and a set-off or counterclaim must be pleaded fully and distinctly and all the facts must be alleged which go to make up the particular cause of action relied on as a counterclaim.³⁷ Defendant is entitled to set up by way of cross complaint that the mortgagee obtained possession of the mortgaged property in an action of replevin, that judgment was rendered against him, but that the property was not returned but was converted by the mortgagee and was largely in excess of the amount due on the note secured;³⁸ and a cross petition to establish the priority of a junior mortgage may be filed in an action to foreclose a senior mortgage.³⁹

Disclaimer. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage, a disclaimer is an admission on the record of plaintiff's right, and a denial of the assertion of title on the part of defendant;⁴⁰ and, where defendant admits the execution of a note and mortgage, plaintiff is prima facie entitled to recover and to have the mortgage foreclosed.⁴¹

Amendments or supplemental pleadings which set up a new cause of action are not allowable.

Amended or supplemental pleadings that set up a new cause of action are not allowable.⁴² If the original petition or complaint is amended after defendant has answered, and he reserves the right, prior to the taking of evidence, to answer the amended pleading, he is not bound to adhere to the defenses alleged in the original answer, but may set up any defense otherwise available.⁴³ A supplemental petition which is a complete answer to the material allegations of the plea or answer is not subject to general demurrer.⁴⁴

Bill of particulars. In a proper case, defendant may be entitled to a bill of particulars.⁴⁵

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance

Issues should be framed for all material questions in controversy, and evidence not predicated on allegations in the pleadings will be excluded; but immaterial variances will be disregarded.

questions in controversy,⁴⁶ such as the validity of the mortgage,⁴⁷ and the rights of other encumbrancers to priority,⁴⁸ and the allegations put in issue must be supported by proof in order to authorize a recovery.⁴⁹ Matters not put in issue by the pleadings will not be considered,⁵⁰ and evidence not predicated on allegations in the pleadings will be excluded.⁵¹ Conversely, proof in support of the pleadings is admissible;⁵² and, where defendant alleges a lien on the property for labor and materials furnished for repairs without specifying the nature of the lien, he may prove that it is a pledgee's lien.⁵³

An immaterial variance between the mortgage described and the one proved at the trial will be disregarded,⁵⁴ and a slight variance in the description of the mortgaged property between the pleading and proof will be disregarded if the property is otherwise described so as to be identified.⁵⁵ Although the complaint was based primarily on a note, recovery on a mortgage, a copy of which was attached to the complaint as an exhibit, has been held not a fatal variance.⁵⁶

§ 406. Evidence

The mortgagee has the burden of establishing the facts entitling him to foreclosure by a preponderance of relevant and competent evidence, and a similar burden is on the defendant to establish affirmative defenses.

The burden is on the mortgagee to establish the facts entitling him to the relief sought,⁵⁷ but proof of immaterial facts or allegations is not necessary.⁵⁸ Conversely, the burden is on defendant to establish matters of affirmative defense.⁵⁹ Where a third party intervenes, the burden is on him to show his right and title to the property.⁶⁰ It has been held that there is a presumption that all property within the description in the mortgage and which is in possession of the mortgagor on the appointment of a receiver belonged to the mortgagor on the execution and delivery of the mortgage.⁶¹

Any relevant competent evidence is admissible, although indirect and circumstantial, if not too remote from the fact in issue.⁶² The mortgage in-

§ 407. Attachment or Sequestration

In many jurisdictions statutes provide that on compliance therewith the mortgagee may have a writ for the attachment, sequestration, or seizure of the property in aid of his foreclosure of a chattel mortgage thereon; but if wrongfully issued the mortgagee may be liable in damages. The court may order a sale prior to judgment in a proper case.

On foreclosure in equity, the court may take into its custody the mortgaged property in order to preserve the status quo for the benefit of all the parties, and it may do this through the agency of its marshal or other officer,⁶⁸ or through the agency of a receiver, as shown infra § 409.

Sequestration. In some jurisdictions, a writ of sequestration may properly issue in suits for the foreclosure of chattel mortgages, verbal or written;⁶⁹ and, while an affidavit for sequestration must be filed as part of the record in a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage before the issuance of the writ,⁷⁰

the affidavit for sequestration is not an essential element of plaintiff's cause of action for debt and foreclosure of the chattel mortgage.⁷¹ Where the mortgagor and mortgagee conspired to secure fraudulently the release of property from an officer who had seized it in an action against the mortgagor, the mortgagee's subsequent sequestration of the property in a subsequent action on a chattel mortgage in another county has been held illegal.⁷²

Attachment. In other jurisdictions provision is made for an attachment in aid of foreclosure, compliance with such provision being essential to the issuance of the writ;⁷³ and, where more than one person has an interest in the personal property, the levy under attachment is unlawful except as to the interests of the mortgagors.⁷⁴ Under the statute, writs of attachment in aid of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage may be subject to a motion to dissolve as other writs of attachment.⁷⁵ However, the dis-

Not retroactive

A statute providing that a writ of attachment in aid of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage is subject to a motion to dissolve as other writs of attachment has been held not retroactive.—Tilghman v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 105 So. 823, 90 Fla. 282.

Earlier statute

(1) Rev.Gen.St.1920 § 3405 pro-

missal of a bill to foreclose a chattel mortgage, alleging the maturity of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage and default in payment, on the dissolution of an attachment is erroneous, no other reason appearing for the order of dismissal.⁷⁶

A statute authorizing the officer levying a warrant of attachment to demand indemnity from the attaching mortgagee where the property is claimed by another person than defendant, has no application where the property is not in the possession of defendant in the warrant of attachment, but is taken from the possession of claimant.⁷⁷

Warrant of seizure. In still other jurisdictions provision is made for the issuance of a warrant of seizure in aid of foreclosure where the mortgagee is out of possession, and, when complainant complies therewith and sustains his claim by an affidavit, the court should issue the writ on the giving of a bond by complainant in accordance with the statute.⁷⁸ A mortgagor's locking of a door and refusing access to, or inspection of, the property by the mortgagee has been held to constitute secreting of property within the meaning of the statute authorizing a warrant of seizure without notice.⁷⁹ A warrant of seizure is improperly issued on the ground that the property had not been stored in a certain building where it appears that such building did not exist.⁸⁰

Damages. A mortgagee cannot deal with property seized under a writ of sequestration in a foreclosure suit as owner, and if he sells it privately before it could have been sold under judicial process he is guilty of conversion,⁸¹ although, under some circumstances, such a sale has been considered as intended to be made of final effect by the decree of the court of foreclosure and sale under the mortgage stipulation,⁸² and where the mortgagee has the express right to take the property into his possession after the maturity of the debt he is not liable for wrongful sequestration although a writ issued which was later quashed, unless the property was negligently handled by the mortgagee and damage resulted therefrom.⁸³ However, a mortgagee must exercise good faith in prosecuting an action to foreclose his lien after taking possession of the property under a writ of sequestration, notwithstanding a repossession clause in the mortgage, and a mortgagee, having taken possession of property under a writ of sequestration and dismissed the case without returning the property, cannot avail himself of a provision in the mortgage for repossession as a defense to the mortgagor's action for damages, and the mortgagor may recover the difference between the amount due the mortgagee and the value of the property.⁸⁴ Reasonable attorney's fees may be recovered by the mortgagor as part of the damages, although the mortgagee was partly successful, where it was necessary to defend the entire cause of action in order to secure the release of the property so seized under the warrant.⁸⁵

An agreement by the mortgagor to waive any right of action by reason of the taking of possession of the property has been held to waive only a right of action for taking possession upon some breach of contract by the mortgagor, and does not preclude an action for damages from sequestration at a time when the mortgagor had performed every legal obligation the contract imposed upon him.⁸⁶

That a mechanic's lienholder recovered possession of property under a claimant's bond after it had

vides merely a statutory chancery attachment writ in aid of foreclosure and is under the control of the chancery court foreclosing the mortgage.—Tilghman v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 105 So. 823, 90 Fla. 282—Alford v. Leonard, 102 So. 885, 88 Fla. 532.

(2) Proceedings for the discharge of attachments in aid of foreclosure must be taken under the rules of chancery practice.—Tilghman v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., supra—Alford v. Leonard, supra.

(3) Under such statute a writ of attachment in aid of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage was not subject to a motion to dissolve as other writs of attachment.—Tilghman v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., supra—Alford v. Leonard, supra—Skinner v. Moore, 98 So. 331, 86 Fla. 365.

been sequestered has been held not a basis for a claim of damages by a chattel mortgagee.⁸⁷

Penalty of bond. In an action on a bond given to secure a warrant of seizure, damages may be recovered against the principal therein in excess of the penalty named, only to the extent of legal interest on the penal sum from the date of the breach thereof.⁸⁸

Order of sale. The court cannot order a sale in advance of the regular foreclosure sale on the ground that there is danger of the property suffering a depreciation in value,⁸⁹ unless the property is of a perishable nature.⁹⁰

§ 408. Redelivery of Property to Mortgagor on Security

Provision is generally made by statute for redelivery of the property to the mortgagor after seizure in aid of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, and the liability of sureties on a forthcoming or redelivery bond is dependent on the terms of the bond and the statutes.

Where property is taken under a writ of attachment or sequestration, etc., in aid of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage thereon, provision is generally made by statute for the redelivery of the property to the mortgagor on the giving of a bond or other security.⁹¹ On compliance with some statutes, no order of the court is necessary for the restoration of the property;⁹² and on redelivery of the property to the mortgagor the latter holds the property in express recognition of the mortgagee's rights and as trustee for him.⁹³

Obligation and liability of surety. The obligation of sureties on a bond to replevy property after seizure in a mortgage foreclosure suit extends only to see that the property is properly taken care of and is forthcoming to abide the decision of the court.⁹⁴ Although in some jurisdictions the statutes do not specifically authorize an entry of judgment against the sureties on a forthcoming bond,⁹⁵ where the mortgagee is successful he is entitled to a judgment against the sureties and principal on the replevy bond for the value of the property as fixed by the officer taking and approving said bond, subject to the right of defendants to satisfy the judgment by complying with the provisions of the statute by surrendering the property,⁹⁶ and refusal of judgment against the sureties on the mortgagor's replevin bond where the mortgagee recovered judgment has been held erroneous.⁹⁷ While the allegation in an affidavit for sequestration as to the value of the property sought to be sequestered serves as a predicate for the amount of the applicant's bond, it does not fix the value as a predicate for the judgment against the obligors on the replevin bond where the property is replevied,⁹⁸ and the value of the property at the date of the trial, plus any recoverable damages to it since its replevy, is the full measure of the sureties' liability on the replevy bond,⁹⁹ and a judgment against the sureties on the

Specifically authorizing satisfaction by redelivery

(1) In some cases it has been held that the judgment may, but need not, specifically authorize satisfaction thereof by the sureties on the replevy bond by delivering the property to the proper officer within a certain time.—Continental Gin Co. v. Thorndale Mercantile Co., Tex.Com.App., 254 S.W. 939—Irwin v. Auto Finance Co., Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 871, reversed on other grounds Rogers v. Irwin, Com.App., 60 S.W.2d 192.

(2) In other cases it has been held that the judgment is erroneous if it does not provide for their discharge upon delivery of the property.—Laseter v. Hyde, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 388—Ingram v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W. 524.

Evidence held to sustain finding as to value

In foreclosure of mortgage lien on automobile sold three months previously for one thousand two hundred ninety-five dollars, for which mortgagor executed replevy bond of two thousand two hundred dollars, evidence held to sustain finding that car was worth five hundred dollars when bond was executed.—Cottle v. Jefferson Securities Co., Tex.Civ. App., 272 S.W. 819.

Valuing articles separately

(1) Where more than one sequestered article is replevied, the court

replevy bond, predicated on the value of the property at the time of the replevy, has been held erroneous.¹ Where the sequestered property replevied was valued by the court at more than the amount of the judgment against the principal in the replevy bond, a judgment against the replevy bond sureties for the amount found against the principal is proper;² but the sureties may render themselves liable to a decree for the amount of the debt where they bind themselves to abide the decree by paying the amount adjudged to be due.³ Under some statutes, where the mortgagor has replevied the property after seizure on a writ of sequestration, he can only be required to place it in the hands of the proper officer for sale to satisfy the judgment and cannot be required to deliver the property to plaintiff; and a judgment which, as a prerequisite to discharge of the sureties, directs the replevied property to be delivered to the officer of one county for delivery to plaintiff and in another paragraph directs delivery of the property to an officer of another county for sale to satisfy the judgment has been held erroneous.⁴

§ 409. Injunction and Receiver

Where proper grounds therefor are shown, equity will, in the absence of an adequate remedy at law, appoint a receiver to take charge of property pending the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, or will issue an injunction to preserve such property.

A chancery court in which a foreclosure suit is properly brought has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver to take charge of the mortgaged property as incident to jurisdiction in the foreclosure suit;⁵ but a mortgage or deed of trust which has never been executed cannot be the basis for the appointment of a receiver.⁶ Generally, a receiver will not be appointed pending a suit to foreclose, where the mortgagee has an adequate remedy at law,⁷ or where it is not apparent that the rights of any person in interest are in jeopardy, because the appointment of a receiver is an extraordinary remedy, to be resorted to only in cases of emergency;⁸ but where the appointment of a receiver is provided for by statute, it has been held no objection that the mortgagee has other legal or equitable remedies, such objection being held valid only where the appointment is based on equitable usages.⁹ The appointment of a receiver is not error where the mortgage provides for the appointment of a receiver on a breach of the conditions thereof;¹⁰ and equitable grounds for relief may be shown which will justify the appointment, although the mortgage does not provide therefor,¹¹ even though the statute allows a rendering judgment against the replevy bond sureties must find the value of each article separately.—Rogers v. Irwin, Tex.Com.App., 60 S.W.2d 192, reversing Irwin v. Auto Finance Co., Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 871.

(2) A judgment foreclosing a mortgage on an automobile and equipment replevied after sequestration has been held not erroneous as against the replevy bond sureties because not finding the value of the equipment separately, in the absence of a showing that the equipment was not attached to the automobile.—Rogers v. Irwin, supra.

(3) Replevy bond surety bringing error proceedings alone could not complain that the judgment foreclosing the mortgage on a sequestered automobile and all equipment was erroneous as to him because not separately finding the value of the equipment, where the affidavit for sequestration and the replevy bond referred to the automobile alone.—Rogers v. Irwin, supra.

General statute not applicable

Statutes providing that, where defendant replevies the property sequestered, judgment may be rendered against his sureties for the value of the property, or requiring the property to be delivered to plaintiff, have been held not to apply where the property is sequestered on foreclosure of a mortgage in view of a provision that, if plaintiff recovers judgment for foreclosure, the property is to be sold to satisfy the judgment.

Future advances not made

A deed of trust to cover advances to a tenant, where the owner immediately refuses to make the advances, cannot be used as a basis for appointment of a receiver, although it recites that it is to be also supplemental security for a balance due under a deed of trust for the preceding year, where the tenant acquiesces and offers possession, such acts being in effect a rescission of the deed.—*Burton v. Third persons taking property

The mere fact that parties have, without right, taken possession of a part of the mortgaged property, and that others are threatening to take more of it from its rightful owner does not warrant the appointment of a receiver, as the mortgagee may resort to his action at law against these parties.—*Gilbert v. mortgage to be foreclosed in an action at law.¹² Among these grounds are the inadequacy of property to secure the debt,¹³ the insolvency of the mortgagor¹⁴ and danger that the property will be lost or materially injured,¹⁵ or that the property is subsequently put into the hands of a third party, who is insolvent and wasting it, to the destruction of the lien sought to be foreclosed,¹⁶ and if the mortgage gives the mortgagor power to sell and he fails to exercise it within a reasonable time, the court may appoint a receiver to sell it, especially if the mortgaged property is perishable and liable to deteriorate.¹⁷ Ordinarily, a receiver will not be appointed where it appears prima facie that the mortgagor is solvent,¹⁸ although there may be circumstances under which a showing of insolvency is not necessary,¹⁹ and in a proper case a receiver may be appointed even though the mortgagee's right to foreclose has not accrued.²⁰

However, the condition of the property after institution of the suit cannot change the legal rights of the parties as they existed at the time the suit was instituted;²¹ and it is improper for the court to appoint a receiver for property not embraced in the mortgage,²² or to appoint a receiver to take possession of a chattel where it has been sold to a purchaser, without actual notice of the mortgage, by the mortgagor with the implied consent of the mortgagee,²³ or to appoint a receiver to take the property and to use it pending litigation where the mortgagor has a right to a speedy foreclosure and sale,²⁴ but a receiver may be appointed to take possession of property purchased with the proceeds of the sale

Receiver will be appointed only when it is shown that the property is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured, or for any other reason when, in the discretion of the court, it may be necessary to secure ample justice to the parties.—Gahagan v. Wisner, 247 P. 965, 139 Wash. 664.

Clear showing necessary

To justify a receiver in a foreclosure suit against a tenant, there should be a clear showing of inadequacy of the security, insolvency, and that the tenant had either removed or abandoned the premises or was misappropriating the property, or doing something to destroy the value of the security, and it is not enough to show that he is short of feed and supplies after surviving a winter.—Burton v. To operate plantation

A deed of trust on stock machinery and crops for a year finished has been held not a basis for appointment of a receiver to farm the property for the current year, and to use the tenant's property for the benefit of the landlord; and where a landlord had a receiver appointed in the spring, before planting time who took possession of a farm, and there was no order authorizing the receiver to spend any money or incur debts, and farmed the land with the tenant's implements and stock it was held that the tenant was not chargeable with rent.—Burton v. Pepper, supra.

One holding a subsequent mortgage cannot object to the appointment of a receiver on the application of the prior mortgagee, where the claim secured by such prior mortgage is larger than the value of the property.²⁶

Property in possession of mortgagee. A receiver may be appointed to take charge of property in the possession of a mortgagee, where a creditor having the right to redeem tenders payment, which is refused and the property is retained,²⁷ but where the mortgagee is in possession of the property, and there is no dispute as to the amount due or as to the property, a receiver should not be appointed.²⁸

Pending injunction. The court may place the mortgaged chattels in the hands of a receiver pending the trial of a suit to enjoin the foreclosure of the mortgage.²⁹

Procedure for appointment. The facts on which the application is based must be sufficiently alleged in the bill or petition,³⁰ and if a sufficient showing is made, a rule may be issued against the mortgagor to show cause why the appointment should not be made.³¹ Ordinarily, a notice and hearing are necessary,³² but under exceptional circumstances, or where the parties are all before the court, notice may be dispensed with,³³ in which case, defendant may appeal, or move to vacate the appointment, or appear on the day set and show cause why the receivership should not be continued.³⁴ The improper appointment of a receiver may be waived or ratified by the mortgagor.³⁵

Effect of appointment. The appointment of a receiver does not in any manner affect the priority of claims,³⁶ although it does have the same effect, as against a subsequent lienor, as if possession were taken by the mortgagee.³⁷ A receiver's possession in an action to foreclose cannot be interfered with by creditors of the mortgagor;³⁸ he holds for the benefit of the person to whom the court ultimately decides that the property belongs.³⁹

It is the duty of the mortgagor to deliver the property adjudged to be covered by the mortgage to the receiver, unless subsequent to the judgment he has acquired some right thereto,⁴⁰ but the persons refusing possession to the receiver cannot be held in contempt therefor where the receiver has demanded more than he was entitled to receive.⁴¹

Bond to prevent appointment. By giving bond with sufficient sureties to produce the mortgaged property, a mortgagor can prevent the appointment of a receiver.⁴²

Discharge of receiver. Where a receiver appointed in a foreclosure proceeding sells mortgaged chattels pursuant to the court's order, on the subsequent trial of the foreclosure action it is error to discharge the receiver and to set aside his acts.⁴³

An injunction will not lie to preserve the property, or to have other property substituted, pending foreclosure if the parties have an adequate remedy at law;⁴⁴ nor will an injunction issue to protect the possession of the property pending foreclosure where a statutory remedy by sequestration is more direct.⁴⁵ However, equity will prevent, by injunction, a mortgagor from impairing the value of, or destroying, the mortgaged property;⁴⁶ and the discretion of the trial court has been held not abused in the granting of a temporary restraining order against further disposal of the mortgaged property where it was shown that defendants were disposing of such property and were about to dispose of more,⁴⁷ but it is error to issue an injunction restraining disposition of property not subject to the mortgage.⁴⁸

closure cannot in any way affect the finding and decree on the merits, where otherwise regular.⁴⁹

§ 410. Trial or Hearing

Defendants in a foreclosure suit are entitled to hearing and questions of fact should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions where a jury trial is had and the verdict or findings, which will be given a reasonable construction, must be sufficient to support the judgment.

While, in every case defendants in foreclosure must be given an opportunity to be heard,⁵⁰ the denial of a compulsory order of reference is not error where there is no issue requiring the examination of a long account.⁵¹

Questions of law and fact. Where a jury trial is had and the evidence is conflicting,⁵² question of fact should be submitted to the jury.⁵³ However, where the proceeding to foreclose is regarded as purely equitable in its character, the court may determine issues of both law and fact,⁵⁴ and although issues of fact may be submitted to a jury,⁵⁵ the verdict thereon is regarded as merely advisory in some jurisdictions.⁵⁶

Direction of verdict. The court should not direct a verdict where the evidence presents a jury question or makes out a case for the jury,⁵⁷ but, where no question of fact is presented, a direction of verdict is proper.⁵⁸

Instructions. Where questions of fact are submitted to the jury, they should be accompanied by proper instructions from the court;⁵⁹ and in submitting an issue to the jury, where the status of the parties has changed during the suit, such change in the status must not be overlooked.⁶⁰ However, it is improper to instruct the jury on issues not raised by the pleadings.⁶¹ Where an action is brought to recover on the mortgage debt and also for a foreclosure, the jury should be required, if they find for plaintiffs, to find the amount due them, including interest and attorney's fees.⁶²

Verdict, findings, and conclusions. The findings of the court must be sufficient to justify the judgment,⁶³ and must not be inconsistent,⁶⁴ but findings as to matter alleged which is not sufficient to constitute a defense need not be made.⁶⁵ In an action to foreclose more than one chattel mortgage, when a disposal of, or an injury to, the property or its deterioration is relied on as ground of foreclosure before the note secured is due, separate findings should be made as to the security of each mortgage, and the court must find the amount due on the debt secured by each mortgage separately.⁶⁶

Construction of findings. The findings will be given a natural and reasonable construction.⁶⁷ A special finding limits and controls a general finding; and in such case it is the duty of the court to reject the conclusion of such general finding.⁶⁸

§ 411. Judgment or Decree

- a. Scope and extent of relief
- b. Requisites and validity of decree

a. Scope and Extent of Relief

Where equity acquires jurisdiction of a foreclosure proceeding, it will retain it for the purpose of affording complete relief; foreclosure will not be granted where it would be futile, and the mortgagee is not entitled to recover more than the amount of his indebtedness.

Courts of equity have control of mortgaged personal property and have the power to make all needful orders to secure the rights of all parties claiming an interest therein,⁶⁹ and, where a court of equity has acquired jurisdiction of a proceeding to foreclose, it will retain such jurisdiction for the purpose of affording complete relief as between the parties,⁷⁰ and the general equity power of ascertaining and adjusting the rights of all parties before the court will be exercised.⁷¹ Claims of third persons, made parties, to the property in suit may be

Instructions held proper

(1) In proceeding to foreclose crop mortgage covering any additional farm supplies furnished mortgagor, charge that mortgagee could apply payments, made without direction as to application, first to satisfaction of amount due for additional supplies, crediting mortgage note with balance.—Taliaferro v. J. S. Cowart & Son, supra.

(2) In action to foreclose mortgage securing notes covering purchase price of grain separator, instruction on theory of one order and one contract for machinery.—Advance-Rumely Thresher Co. v. Johnson, 243 N.W. 919, 62 N.D. 553.

(3) An instruction that fraudulent intent may be established by circumstances.—Palmer v. Moyers, Mo.App., 298 S.W. 101.

Failure to instruct

In replevin action to foreclose chattel mortgage, where defense was that plaintiff was indebted to defendant, failure to instruct that amount so due must equal that due on mortgage note to defeat plaintiff's cause of action was error.—Securities Inv. Corporation v. Krejci, Neb., 271 N.W. 287.

adjusted by a court in foreclosure proceedings;⁷² and, if claimant has only an equitable lien, the question of his priority is purely of equitable cognizance.⁷³ It follows that in such actions liens equitably entitled to priority over the mortgage may be enforced,⁷⁴ although some cases hold that one of the recognized limitations on equitable jurisdiction in such actions is that there can be no litigation of title paramount or hostile to the mortgage.⁷⁵

A mortgagee may be entitled to either a judgment of foreclosure or for conversion as warranted by the evidence,⁷⁶ but an alternative judgment for plaintiff in an action to foreclose, awarding a specified amount of money in the event that a delivery of the mortgaged property could not be had, should not award an amount in excess of the amount of the indebtedness unpaid,⁷⁷ and it is error to render a judgment for the value of the property against a third person as having converted it and also to direct foreclosure of the mortgage lien on the same property where none of it is lost, destroyed, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁷⁸ Also, a judgment decreeing that, if possession of the chattels could not be given, the mortgagee should be entitled to a judgment for the full amount of the mortgage with interest is unauthorized as against another lienor or the levying officer in the absence of any evidence as to the value of the chattels at the time of the conversion by them;⁷⁹ but a judgment against the mortgagor for the principal, interest, and attorney's fees with foreclosure of the mortgage lien and awarding, on replevy bond after sequestration, the value of the replevied property has been held not defective as amounting to a double recovery.⁸⁰ However, it has been held that a mortgagee, having only a lien on the property, cannot recover damages for the wrongful conversion of the property in a chancery proceeding to foreclose the mortgage.⁸¹ In an action to foreclose several mortgages, a judgment foreclosing the last mortgage only is proper where the prior mortgages were ineffectual because of an insufficient description of the property.⁸²

While judgment should not be rendered until all preliminary issues that may affect the extent of the mortgagor's liability have been disposed of,⁸³ in an action to foreclose a mortgage for an indebtedness, the mortgagee is entitled to a judgment for the full amount due⁸⁴ and is not limited to the property covered by the mortgage sought to be foreclosed,⁸⁵ but the failure of the mortgagor to avail himself of the privilege of ascertaining the amount of the mortgage debt will not serve to award to the mortgagee more than his full debt with interest,⁸⁶ and a mortgagee by acquiring possession by detinue is in no position to obtain advantage merely by reason of the form of action, and is not entitled to recovery for the detention of the property in addition to the amount of the debt.⁸⁷ Conversely, the sum decreed as due must not exceed the amount due at the time of the decree,⁸⁸ including, of course, interest and legal expenses,⁸⁹ although such a judgment has been held not void in the absence of prejudice.⁹⁰ The computation of a judgment by award-

Holder of conditional bill of sale

Where the mortgage covers more chattels than a conditional bill of sale, over which it took priority, the judgment of foreclosure should direct a sale of all the chattels in order to protect the holder of the bill of sale.—Seger & Gross Co. v. Maclaure, 165 N.Y.S. 423.

Claim and delivery

A mortgagee has the right to have a foreclosure judgment entered where the property is in custodia legis, although a claim and delivery proceeding by other persons was pending, where such persons were made parties to the foreclosure and no request for a delay was made.—Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank v. ing the difference between the amount of plaintiff's verdict and defendant's verdict on a counterclaim has been held not improper.⁹¹

Under an agreement which is insufficient to constitute a mortgage lien, while plaintiff may recover the amount due, he is not entitled to a judgment giving him a mortgage lien on the property;⁹² and under statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, unless exceptional complications are present, strict foreclosure of a mortgage can be granted only in cases where the legal title is in the party seeking foreclosure.⁹³ Under a statute authorizing a judgment permitting the officer to levy on other property of the mortgagor in case of inability to find the mortgaged property, such a judgment has been held proper, although the mortgagee has taken possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor being able to protect himself by proper resort to a court of equity if the mortgagee should secrete the property and thereby prevent the officer holding the writ of execution from finding it.⁹⁴ Although the property is in the hands of a receiver pendente lite, the court appointing the receiver may order the proper officer to sell the property under a special execution on rendering a judgment of foreclosure.⁹⁵

The owner of property not included in the mortgage is entitled to recover his interest in such property where it was destroyed while in possession of the mortgagee under sequestration;⁹⁶ and an allowance to the mortgagor for property unaccounted for by the receiver, which property was taken along with mortgaged property, has been held authorized against the mortgagee where he purchased all the mortgaged property,⁹⁷ but the interveners in a foreclosure action cannot recover for more property than was seized.⁹⁸ Where foreclosure is decreed against property not covered by the mortgage, the owner of such property has a right to have a proper decree of foreclosure entered notwithstanding he may have a right of action against the sheriff for taking such property.⁹⁹

Foreclosure futile. A foreclosure sale will not be decreed where it would be a futile and idle act,¹ as where the property mortgaged has ceased to exist.²

Statute authorizing summary judgment strictly construed. The meaning of a clause in a statute authorizing decrees for the sale of mortgaged property on an assent declared in the mortgage, since it provides a remedy of a summary nature, cannot be enlarged beyond the limits set by the words when read in connection with their context and the subject matter of the legislation.³

Personal or deficiency judgments are treated infra § 419.

b. Requisites and Validity of Decree

- (1) In general

(1) In General

The judgment or decree must be in conformity with the issues, proof, and findings and should not be ambiguous, and it should specify the amount of the lien and designate the property affected with reasonable certainty.

Goods and chattels personal

(1) Term "goods" in statute authorizing decrees for sale of mortgaged chattels real or goods and chattels personal is not so comprehensive as "chattels," "goods" designating inanimate objects, while chattels embrace both animate and inanimate property.—Miller v. Hirschmann, 183 A. 259, 170 Md. 145.

(2) "Chattels personal" are movable things, which may be carried about by or with owner, such as domestic animals, jewels, furniture, etc., and are within statute authorizing Baltimore city circuit courts to decree sales of such chattels with mortgagors' assent, if situated in such city.—Miller v. Hirschmann, supra.

should not be ambiguous⁵ in stating the order of the court directing foreclosure, and the mode in which such order is to be carried out.⁶ It should also describe the property affected with reasonable certainty,⁷ and specify the amount of the lien,⁸ but a judgment has been held not fatally defective as to the mortgagor because of a failure to state the value of each article covered by the mortgage.⁹ While a decree containing mistakes in material matters is improper,¹⁰ errors on immaterial points are not fatal to the validity of the decree,¹¹ and, where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter with which the cause of action dealt, the fact that it made an erroneous ruling will not necessarily render the judgment void.¹² In a foreclosure under a statute the judgment must in all particulars comply with the requirements of the statute.¹³ The judgment or decree may be entered on a written stipulation or agreement of the parties.¹⁴

Judgment by default. If defendant fails to answer the suit, his default admits the execution of the mortgage, and the court may render judgment by default or decree pro confesso for the amount of the mortgage debt and for a sale of the mortgaged property.¹⁵ However, where the affidavit of an intervener is sufficient to set forth his claim, it is improper to enter a default judgment for plaintiff because the intervener filed no answer.¹⁶

Final decree. A decree approving a master's report of sale of the mortgaged property and the expenses therein is a final decree.¹⁷

(2) Parties

Foreclosure will not be decreed against one not in possession of the property and it cannot be decreed where the mortgagor is not a party.

11 C.J. p 729 note 16.

Prayer for relief

In chattel mortgage foreclosure proceeding, under a counterclaim for conversion, it was held that the relief relating to conversion was not restricted to the prayer of relief in the answer.—State Bank of Bowman v. Nelson, 186 N.W. 766, 48 N.D. 702.

Property not covered by mortgage

A judgment decreeing foreclosure of property not covered by the mortgage is erroneous.—Olson v. Lida, 230 P. 643, 131 Wash. 528, reversing Olson v. Fireoed, 225 P. 643, 129 Wash. 635.

Increase of property

Where plaintiff enumerated property described in mortgage, and also stated increase of property was covered thereby, trial court did not err in including increase of property in decree of foreclosure.—Burns v. Corn Exch. Nat. Bank of Omaha, Neb., 240 P. 683, 33 Wyo. 474.

Crops grown to date of judgment

Where mortgage created lien on all crops growing or to be grown until debt was paid, judgment ordering sale of all crops grown to date of entry of judgment was proper.—Lawrence v. Oakes, 3 P.2d 334, 117 Cal.App. 32.

Appointment of receiver and commissioner

The appointment of a receiver and commissioner to gather the property and make sale thereof has been held not error as outside the issues, the word "receiver" adding nothing to the legal effect of the order which, in fact, appointed a commissioner.—Ramsey v. Description sufficient

(1) Judgment authorizing sale and correctly reciting serial number of mortgaged automobile is sufficient to identify it, notwithstanding recital of wrong motor number.—Thompson v. King Motors, 140 So. 257, 19 La. App. 298.

(2) A judgment foreclosing a mortgage covering "office furniture," reciting that foreclosure was granted against office furniture including chairs and tables was not erroneous as limiting, under rule of ejusdem generis, foreclosure to articles of like nature with chairs and tables to exclusion of articles other than cabinet makers' wares, in absence of indication of intention to limit or qualify descriptive language of mortgage by specific reference in judgment, since articles of furniture other than cabinet makers' wares were included within term "office furniture."—Stevenson v. Record Pub. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 462, error dismissed.

Judgment not void

Judgment foreclosing mortgage on "50 cows, 7 bulls and 47 calves, all located in Baylor County, Texas," as described in petition by mortgagee who introduced evidence of legal description of cattle, was not void because not sufficiently identifying cattle.—Busby v. Dismissing bill and ordering sale

Where, in a suit to foreclose chattel mortgage, a receiver appointed in behalf of complainant sold the chattels, and the mortgage was a judgment invalid, it was error to dismiss the bill, and in the same decree order a disposal of the proceeds of sale, since the decree thus rendered depended on the validity of the foreclosure proceedings, but such inadvertence may be corrected.—Hunt v. Ludwig, 118 A. 839, 94 N.J.Eq. 158, affirming 116 A. 699, 93 N.J.Eq. 314.

17. Fla.—Alford v. Leonard, 102 S 885, 88 Fla. 532.

The fact that there can be no personal judgment in a proceeding to foreclose, because of the absence of the necessary parties will not prevent a decree for foreclosure where the proper parties for that purpose are before the court.¹⁸ Foreclosure will not be decreed against one not in possession of the mortgaged chattels,¹⁹ and foreclosure cannot be decreed where the mortgagor is not a party.²⁰ In case of the mortgagor's death pending foreclosure the action must be revived against his legal representatives; otherwise no valid foreclosure can be decreed.²¹ A purchaser of personal property, pending a bill to foreclose a chattel mortgage thereon, is bound by the decree that may be made against the person from whom he derives title.²²

Joint mortgagees. Under a decree foreclosing a mortgage executed to two mortgagees to secure distinct debts, without indicating whether they take as joint tenants or tenants in common, the mortgagees are entitled to the property as joint tenants in proportion to their debts as they then exist, although one debt may have been reduced more than the other.²³

(3) Effect

A mortgage becomes merged in a judgment of foreclosure, and the judgment is conclusive as to defenses which should have been set up in the action.

A judgment for the foreclosure of a mortgage affirms the validity of the mortgage and plaintiff's right to satisfaction out of the specific property covered by it,²⁴ and is a binding adjudication that plaintiff in such action has a better title to the property than a defendant therein who was claiming under another mortgage.²⁵ The mortgagee does not get legal title to the property under a judgment of foreclosure, but only a lien on the property,²⁶ and the mortgage becomes merged in the judgment.²⁷

and has no further vitality as long as the judgment stands.²⁸ The assignor of a mortgage is bound by a finding that the assignee was the owner of the mortgage in a foreclosure suit to which the assignor was a party,²⁹ and a final decree of foreclosure is conclusive as to defenses which should have been set up in the action,³⁰ and a general judgment for plaintiff, although irregular in form, disposes of all parties and issues,³¹ but a judgment of foreclosure has been held not conclusive as to any incidental or collateral questions not actually put in issue and adjudicated.³² In the absence of fraud or collusion, when a junior mortgagee forecloses his mortgage and obtains possession of the property from one who is the successor in interest of, and stands in privity with, the senior mortgagee and obtains a valid judgment against such person decreeing the junior mortgagee to be the owner of the property and such judgment is unappealed from, the rights of the senior mortgagee will be precluded by such judgment.³³

Where an attempt to foreclose a mortgage is void, the parties to the mortgage are left in the same position as that occupied by them before the foreclosure was attempted.³⁴

§ 412. Sale

While sales on foreclosure are sometimes made through the agency of a special execution, equity will not order them to be so made when it would defeat the ends of justice; mandatory provisions of statutes in reference to such sales must be complied with.

The practice in some jurisdictions is to sell under a foreclosure decree through the agency of a special execution,³⁵ but courts of equity, in ordering a sale of property on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, will not follow the manner of sales on execution, where so to do would defeat the ends of justice.³⁶ A decree of foreclosure does not authorize the seizure and sale of property not described therein;³⁷ but a decree ordering a sale of the property in an adjoining county, although unauthorized by the terms of the contract, is not subject to collateral attack.³⁸

The person in possession of the property may, by an order of attachment, be forced to deliver it to the commissioner appointed to conduct the sale.³⁹ Mere delay in executing the order to sell does not forfeit the mortgagee's right to enforce.⁴⁰ While the chancellor, to adjust the rights between the parties, should order a sale of the property, an execution defendant has no right to complain of the failure of the court to order a sale, if he has received credit on the mortgage debt for the full value of the property,⁴¹ and in the absence of an express agreement or statute requiring a sale of property subject to a chattel mortgage on default, the mortgagee is only obliged to sell in case he desires to hold the mortgagor for any deficiency.⁴²

Advertisement and notice. While the various acts required by statute to be performed by the officer in connection with the sale, such as the advertisement thereof and the return, have been regarded in at least one jurisdiction as directory merely, and not essential to give him the power to sell,⁴³ in other jurisdictions substantial compliance with statutory provisions regarding notice of the sale is necessary,⁴⁴ and the description of the property to be sold at the foreclosure sale must be given with reasonable certainty in the advertisement and notice of sale.⁴⁵ There is a legal presumption that the officer obeyed the directions given by the decree as to the publication of notice of the proposed sale.⁴⁶ A statute prescribing the procedure to subject property covered by a chattel mortgage to the mortgage debt without the consent of the mortgagor and providing that a notice of sale must be given the owner of the equity of redemption and that for a violation thereof the debt secured by the mortgage shall be deemed fully satisfied and the mortgage canceled has been held invalid.⁴⁷

Appraisal. Where an appraisal is required by statute, before sale, the fact that the mortgagor waived such requirement does not preclude the mortgagee from moving to set aside the sale for failure to have an appraisal.⁴⁸

§ 413. — Claims of Third Persons

After judgment in a foreclosure action, third persons claiming an interest in the property may generally restrain the sale of the property or secure proper relief by appropriate action.

Where execution has issued on a judgment in foreclosure, claimant in rightful possession of the mortgaged property may retain it through statutory provisions for the trial of right to property.⁴⁹

In the absence of statutory provisions, a third person owning property seized in a chattel mortgage foreclosure action may claim ownership orally or in writing, such claim need not state the value of the property, and if stated, claimant is not bound, the value of the property being a question for the jury.⁵⁰

A third person claiming an interest in property, where such claim is denied, has the burden of proving his right thereto⁵¹ by a preponderance of the evidence;⁵² and he cannot claim the proceeds of the sale by priority and at the same time attack the act of mortgage under which the sale was made.⁵³

After final judgment, the denial of a petition of intervention by parties who had not established their claim, is within the discretion of the court.⁵⁴

Although a judgment in foreclosure directs that the claim of a third person be fully paid from the proceeds of sale, such third person cannot insist on a sale under the judgment after the mortgage indebtedness has been paid and the mortgage discharged.⁵⁵ A person paying a note secured by a chattel mortgage, which also partly secured other indebtedness, has been held entitled on intervention in foreclosure proceedings to require the payee of the note to exhaust the additional security first before satisfying his claim out of the property covered by the mortgage.⁵⁶

Intervention prior to judgment in a foreclosure action is treated supra § 403.

§ 414. — Manner and Conduct of Sale

Substantial compliance with existing statutory provisions is necessary to render a foreclosure sale valid, but the sale will not be set aside for mere irregularities.

Where statutes are in force regarding the manner and conduct of a foreclosure sale, substantial compliance therewith is generally sufficient.⁵⁷ The sale is a judicial one, and in the absence of a statute directing an execution to be issued therefor the court may order any person to make the sale and may prescribe the manner of the sale.⁵⁸ The officer making the sale acts as an officer of the court,⁵⁹ and may make a valid sale under the order issued in pursuance of a foreclosure decree, even though the mortgaged property is not present, or under his control, at the time and place of sale.⁶⁰ The property should be sold in the manner calculated to bring the best price,⁶¹ and the court may direct the officer to offer it for sale both separately and together, in order to determine this;⁶² but where there are several mortgages on separate parcels of personal property securing different debts, the total mortgaged property cannot be sold in one lot to pay the balance due on all the debts.⁶³

The failure to sell all of the mortgaged property will not invalidate the sale where part of the property could not be located.⁶⁴ Omissions and irregularities of the sheriff at a sale held by him are not chargeable to the buyer, but are questions between the sheriff and the parties to the judgment.⁶⁵

Attacking sale. A foreclosure sale will not be set aside in an action therefor on the ground of collusion and fraud, where there is no claim of new evidence or matters not known at the time of the foreclosure proceedings;⁶⁶ and the fact that personalty in a receiver's control was sold while it was in the physical possession of tenants has been held not to warrant setting aside the sale on the ground that the property could not be delivered to the purchaser.⁶⁷ One desiring a sale of mortgaged property in separate units should present a timely application therefor,⁶⁸ and before a foreclosure sale of a number of pieces of property sold in parcels or all as one may be set aside, it must be shown that it would have brought a higher price if sold piece by piece.⁶⁹ Alleged conduct of an attorney representing the mortgagee at the sale is not ground for setting aside the sale where such conduct was not improper;⁷⁰ and the adequacy of the price at the sale being within the discretion of the trial court,

Extent of waiver of statute

Provision in bill of sale to secure debt waiving notice of application for speedy sale of perishable property or property liable to deteriorate from keeping was held not waiver of notice of application for speedy sale of mule, and hence speedy sale of mule without such notice was void.—Jackson v. Stating priority and amount of other liens

Where an attorney representing such question will be reviewed only for the purpose of determining whether there has been an abuse of discretion.⁷¹

A mortgagor's creditor has been held not entitled to take advantage of mere irregularities in the foreclosure sale;⁷² and a foreclosure sale is not subject to collateral attack for mere irregularities.⁷³

§ 415. — Persons Who May Purchase

A mortgagee may purchase the property at a foreclosure sale.

The holder of a mortgage may purchase at the sale, under a decree of foreclosure,⁷⁴ and cannot be disturbed in his purchase by the trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor, on account of irregularities in the sale.⁷⁵

§ 416. — Report of Sale

Ordinarily, the officer must make a return or report after he has sold the property and the sale must be confirmed by the court where so required by statute or decree of the court.

Generally, after the officer has sold the property in accordance with the decree of the court, he must make a return or report.⁷⁶ However, the fact that the officer's return failed to disclose how much the personalty and the realty were sold for respectively has been held harmless, as such error could be corrected by an amended return.⁷⁷

Confirmation of sale. While a foreclosure sale may be effective without confirmation by the court where confirmation is not required either by statute or order of court,⁷⁸ generally, after the officer has made a return or report to the court, his action must then be confirmed,⁷⁹ and the court may order a confirmation which will relate back to the time of sale.⁸⁰ While, ordinarily, the inadequacy of price is not ground for withholding an order of confirmation of the sale, a sale at a price that is inequitable will not be confirmed.⁸¹

§ 417. — Effect of Sale

A judgment of foreclosure and sale of the property completely extinguishes the mortgage, and the mortgagor has neither legal nor equitable title to the property, but only a personal privilege to redeem.

A judgment of foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee completely extinguishes the mortgage,⁸² and satisfies the mortgage debt to the extent of the net proceeds obtained;⁸³ and by force of statutory provision, it has been held to discharge the debt entirely when the person liable therefor was not made a party to the proceedings.⁸⁴

the mortgagee at a foreclosure sale, when questioned, told contemplated purchasers the amount of liens against the property, stating that he represented the lien claimants and that in his opinion the liens were valid and superior to the mortgage lien, and where he further allowed additional time for the investigation of such matters before starting the sale, his conduct was not such as to discourage the bidding.—*Jesseph v. Where the property was sold under foreclosure of a second mortgage to the mortgagee who was also the holder of the first mortgage thereon, it was held that the lien of the first mortgage became merged in the higher title, and ceased to exist.⁸⁵

After a foreclosure sale of mortgaged property, the mortgagor has neither legal nor equitable title thereto, but is left with a mere personal privilege to redeem, and the title vests in the purchaser subject to the statutory privilege to redeem,⁸⁶ and until the sale has been set aside or declared void, the purchaser remains bound for the purchase price.⁸⁷

A lessee cannot sustain a claim to the property after a sale thereof under foreclosure proceedings to which the lessor was a party;⁸⁸ and the person conducting a sale under a judgment of foreclosure is protected against all adverse claimants of the property.⁸⁹ On a collateral attack, the price obtained at such sale has been held conclusively to fix the value of the property in the absence of fraud.⁹⁰

§ 418. — Title and Rights of Purchaser

The title of the purchaser under a foreclosure sale is dependent on the validity and priority of the mortgage and the regularity of the foreclosure proceedings, and he is ordinarily entitled only to property covered by the mortgage and the bill of sale thereunder.

The title of the purchaser, under a judicial foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, depends on the validity of the mortgage foreclosed,⁹¹ its priority of lien,⁹² and the regularity and legality of the foreclosure proceedings.⁹³ A purchase by a chattel mortgagee at his own sale has been held not void, but only voidable at the mortgagor's election.⁹⁴ While it has been held that the burden is not on the purchaser to show that the sale was lawful,⁹⁵

Delivery of property

Where purchaser at sale under deed of trust was already in possession at time of sale as lessee of grantor, a formal delivery was unnecessary.—F. D. Cummer & Son Co. v. R. M. Hudson Co., 127 S.E. 171, 141 Va. 271.

Payment of purchase money

(1) Where sale of property under deed of trust was regarded as completed by both trustee and purchaser, fact that payment of price for property sold was temporarily deferred did not affect sale, where it was by agreement between trustee and purchaser.—F. D. Cummer & Son Co. v. R. M. Hudson Co., supra.

(2) The owner of a mortgage who bid in the property at a foreclosure sale for cash, for more than the amount due on the mortgage, and who made no payment on his purchase, was held to acquire no title to the property.—Weber Impl. Co. v. Dunard, 164 S.W. 685, 181 Mo.App. 658.

Notice that sale was fraudulent

Defendants may show that an alleged sale under a deed of trust was a mere sham and a fraud on the rights of creditors and that such facts were known to the purchaser at the sale.—McClure Grocery Co. v. Watson, 139 S.E. 288, 148 Va. 601.

Void sale to mortgagee

Where buyer of mule conveyed mule to seller in bill of sale to secure purchase price, purchase of mule by seller at void foreclosure sale for less than debt secured was not rescission of sale to buyer; hence buyer was entitled to have mule restored, and seller was entitled to payment of purchase money due or to resale of mule in proper manner.—Jackson v. Parks, 174 S.E. 203, 45 Ga.App. 29.

Purchaser bound to know of statute

Purchaser of mortgaged property must know as matter of law that he could not obtain good title from sheriff except under statutory procedure.—Porter v. Burtis, 221 N.W. 741, 197 Wis. 227.

Statute relating to void sale

On a void judicial sale under a mortgage foreclosure, the rights of the mortgagors and the purchasers are not affected by a statute providing that the purchaser succeeds to all of the interests of the mortgagee where the purchaser was the mortgagee in the mortgage foreclosed.—Kirkland v. Gaskins, Paulk & Co., 92 S.E. 965, 20 Ga.App. 235.

Estoppel to deny legality of sale

Where plaintiff, holding title to automobiles as security for loan without reconveying them to defendant in fieri facias, instructed sheriff to levy thereon and referred him to attorney of plaintiff in fieri facias for instruction and property was advertised and sold in usual manner, plaintiff in fieri facias was estopped from denying legality of sale and purchaser receives good title as against plaintiff in fieri facias, notwithstanding there was no reconveyance of title.—Washington Loan & Banking Co. v. Butler, 126 S.E. 289, 159 Ga. 520.

where the purchaser was notified before purchase that the sale was illegal, he must show that the sale was valid.⁹⁶ Where the mortgage or deed of trust is apparently valid on its face and the sale apparently regular, it is not necessary for the purchaser to show the amount secured by the mortgage or deed, the value of the property unsold, or the validity of the mortgage or deed, but the burden in such a case is on the attaching creditor, seeking to obtain a lien, to show that his rights were superior to those acquired by the purchaser.⁹⁷

Ordinarily, the purchaser is not entitled to property not covered by the mortgage or bill of sale thereunder;⁹⁸ but appurtenances that are permanent and necessary to the enjoyment of the chattel as originally mortgaged will pass to the purchaser on foreclosure.⁹⁹ The alteration of a chattel mortgage after execution and delivery does not divest the title acquired by a purchaser under the paper as made.¹ The purchaser at the foreclosure sale may maintain an action to recover the property,² and a person buying from the purchaser under a foreclosure sale is entitled to the property on proving ownership thereof.³

A bona fide purchaser at a foreclosure or trustee's sale is not responsible for subsequent unauthorized acts of ownership by the former owner or any other person.⁴

§ 419. Deficiency and Personal Liability

On foreclosure of a chattel mortgage acknowledging an existing debt or containing a promise to pay any deficiency, a personal judgment may be rendered in favor of the mortgagee provided he has not lost his right thereto by waiver or estoppel.

In a proceeding to foreclose, a personal judgment for the amount of the mortgage debt may be entered in a proper case against the original mortgagor,⁵ or, in some jurisdictions, against a grantee who has assumed payment of the mortgage debt,⁶ and against subsequent purchasers of the property who have disposed of or converted it to their own use.⁷ Thus, if there is a promise in the mortgage to pay any deficiency arising on foreclosure,⁸ or if the mortgage expressly acknowledges an existing debt,⁹ then the personal liability of the mortgagor is implied from the execution of the mortgage and a recovery for the deficiency is authorized, without proof of the delivery of a note evidencing the indebtedness;¹⁰ but if there is no separate obligation, no covenant or agreement in the mortgage to pay the sum secured, and no recital or declaration of indebtedness from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, the relief awarded in a foreclosure suit must be confined to a sale of the mortgaged premises.¹¹ This rule also applies to the liability of purchasers of property encumbered by the mortgage,¹² unless the purchaser assumed payment of the mortgage debt.¹³

Where a mortgagee of abstract books on foreclosure purchased the same, and the decree of foreclosure, which gave particular description of the property ordered sold, specified only the books themselves, it was held that the mortgagee's grantee could not recover photographic reproductions of the mortgaged abstract books and records, even though the mortgagor might have been enjoined from making such photographic reproductions.—Wintler Abstract & Loan Co. v. Also, no personal judgment can be given against a party defendant merely because he has asserted some claim against the property;¹⁴ and where third persons claim the property and have taken it under attachment or execution, a money judgment against them for the amount of the unpaid mortgage cannot be rendered in the absence of a showing of the value of the property.¹⁵ Where the property is in the possession of defendant claiming under two mortgages, one senior and one junior to that held by complainant, there can be no personal judgment in the absence of any showing that such defendant was personally indebted to complainant, either by contract or in any other way.¹⁶

The right of a mortgagee to a deficiency judgment may be waived by an oral agreement supported by a sufficient consideration;¹⁷ and may be lost by estoppel.¹⁸ If the mortgagee desires to hold the mortgagor for any deficiency, he must sell the property within a reasonable time or he will be deemed to have elected to retain the property in satisfaction of the whole indebtedness,¹⁹ or at least will be chargeable with the value thereof at the time of taking possession;²⁰ but if a foreclosure sale is had, the mortgagee may collect the balance due although he was the purchaser at such sale.²¹ So, if the mortgagee converts the property to his own use, and its value is less than the mortgage debt, he forfeits or waives all claims against the mortgagor for any deficiency.²²

As a deficiency judgment is an adjudication that prior to its entry the mortgage security has been wholly exhausted,²³ so long as any part of the property remains unsold there can ordinarily be no deficiency judgment.²⁴ A court of equity may, however, decree a personal judgment against the mortgagor without foreclosure, if it is impossible for plaintiff to reach the property subject to his lien;²⁵ and a deficiency judgment entered, without notice, after the lapse of the statutory period since the foreclosure judgment became final, on affidavits that the mortgaged chattels were valueless has been held not void for want of jurisdiction.²⁶

A personal judgment cannot be rendered against a mortgagor who was not personally served;²⁷ and to sustain a personal judgment, the bill must contain appropriate allegations²⁸ and a proper prayer for relief.²⁹ The mortgagor has the burden of establishing his defense to a claim or suit for a deficiency judgment.³⁰

Benefit to promisor or detriment to promisee

Any benefit conferred on promisor to which he is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered by promisee, is sufficient consideration to support agreement between parties to mortgage to waive deficiency judgment, and law does not weigh quantum of such consideration.—Gerson v. Kelsey, supra.

Surrender of personal property to which mortgagors had, at least, legitimate claim, in addition to other property not included in chattel mortgage, was sufficient consideration to support mortgagee's agreement to waive right to deficiency judgment.—Gerson v. Kelsey, supra.

Insurance received by mortgagee

Mortgagor sued for deficiency could not have collision insurance received by mortgagee purchasing automobile at foreclosure credited, where insurance merely represented payments for repairs.—Industrial Acceptance Corporation v. Hodge, supra.

A deficiency judgment cannot be based on a return of a commissioner appointed to make a sale of the mortgaged chattels under a decree of foreclosure to the effect that the chattels were covered by a first mortgage entered to their full value;³¹ nor has the clerk power to enter a personal judgment against defendant, unless the amount due on the indebtedness is found and a personal judgment ordered therefor, or for a deficiency;³² but where a foreclosure sale is ordered and the officer returns the order unsatisfied after an attempted sale of valueless mortgaged chattels, the clerk may enter a deficiency judgment for the full amount of the mortgage.³³ A deficiency judgment against the purchaser of mortgaged property after sustaining his plea of limitation has been held void as ambiguous.³⁴

Where all the property covered by a mortgage is not delivered to the officer for sale on foreclosure of the mortgage and the mortgagee takes a deficiency judgment, the mortgagee is not entitled to a further foreclosure sale while the deficiency judgment remains a subsisting adjudication of the rights of the parties,³⁵ and the mortgagee cannot go behind the deficiency judgment and claim he is entitled to the possession of the remainder of the mortgaged property under his mortgage.³⁶ Where a deficiency judgment is denied in a proceeding to foreclose, it has been held that such denial will bar the right to prosecute an independent action for the deficiency.³⁷

Where judgment is entered, in an action to recover the amount due and to foreclose, on the note alone and not on the mortgage, a subsequent bona fide purchaser of the property will obtain a valid title.³⁸

Sufficiency of evidence

§ 420. Proceeds and Surplus

The proceeds from the sale under a chattel mortgage must ordinarily be applied on the mortgage indebtedness and after the payment of superior claims of other creditors any surplus remaining must be paid over to the mortgagor.

The proceeds from the sale of mortgaged chattels must ordinarily be applied on the mortgage indebtedness,³⁹ in the absence of the mortgagor's consent to a different application,⁴⁰ or unless a sufficient legal excuse is shown for their application otherwise.⁴¹ A mortgagee cannot pay from the proceeds of a chattel mortgage the interest on a real estate mortgage, where the chattel mortgage is invalid as to some of the owners of the chattels;⁴² and on foreclosure of a first mortgage, an allowance out of the proceeds cannot be made to any person under, or by virtue of, any provisions of a second mortgage to which the first mortgagee was not a party.⁴³

Where a receiver has been appointed to take charge of the property pending foreclosure of a mortgage thereon, the property is chargeable with the necessary expense involved in its preservation and care.⁴⁴ Where a mortgage was executed to take care of the mortgagor's outstanding debts and on the assurance of the mortgagee that he would pay them, the creditors of the mortgagee are entitled to a preference in the distribution of the proceeds of a foreclosure sale as against the mortgagee who failed to pay such debts;⁴⁵ and under a mortgage of fixtures only, the sale in a lump of stock and fixtures so that the proceeds of the stock could not be separated from the proceeds of the fixtures has been held to result in the loss of the mortgage lien as against other creditors of the mortgagor.⁴⁶

Questions relating to review of judgments or decrees in chattel mortgage foreclosure proceedings are treated in the title Appeal and Error. The effect of an appeal as a stay of execution is treated in § 674 of such title; and the measure of damages recoverable on a supersedeas bond is treated in § 2072 of such title.

D. FORECLOSURE BY AFFIDAVIT AND EXECUTION

§ 422. In General

Substantial compliance with statutes providing for the foreclosure of mortgages by means of the issuance of execution on the affidavit or petition of the mortgagee is generally necessary and sufficient.

The statutes in some jurisdictions provide for the foreclosure of chattel mortgages by means of the issuance of an execution on the affidavit or petition of the mortgagee. As the remedy provided for by such statutes is of a summary nature, it is generally held that substantial compliance with the provisions of such statutes is necessary and sufficient.⁵⁰

While, under such statutes, it has been held that there can be no foreclosure for debt owing to any one other than the holder of the mortgage,⁵¹ a transferee of a mortgage execution may foreclose the mortgage in his own name as transferee if for any reason the first foreclosure on which the execution is based is irregular or defective.⁵² Where a cropper has mortgaged his interest in the crops, such interest cannot be subjected to the mortgage debt before there has been a division between the cropper and the landlord;⁵³ and where the mortgage is executed to indemnify an insurer or indorser, no foreclosure can be had ordinarily until after judgment against the mortgagee.⁵⁴ However, where a distress warrant and landlord's lien for supplies are levied on crops, a mortgagee thereof may summarily foreclose and place the mortgage feri facias with the levying officer;⁵⁵ and where the mortgagor defaults in the payment of taxes in accordance with the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee may foreclose although no levy has been made to collect the unpaid taxes.⁵⁶ Likewise, where a city license is due by the mortgagor, foreclosure may be had although no execution has been issued therefor.⁵⁷ Also, a bill of sale to secure a debt may be foreclosed as a chattel mortgage without reconveying the property covered by the bill of sale before the foreclosure;⁵⁸ and where the mortgage and notes provide for maturity of the notes where the first is due and unpaid, executory process can

Must account for actual amount realized

Where accounts payable to mortgagor are assigned to mortgagee as collateral security for note secured by mortgage, the accounts will not be given an estimated value in reducing balance due on note, but actual amount realized on accounts will be added to proceeds of sale of mortgaged property for satisfaction of balance due on note and costs of foreclosure, surplus to go to mortgagor.—Kenney v. Hurlburt, 173 P. 158, 88 Or. 688, L.R.A.1918E 652, Ann.Cas. 1918E 737, modifying 172 P. 490, 88 Or. 688, L.R.A.1918E 652, Ann.Cas. 1918E 737.

Certification of copy of mortgage

Substantial compliance with a statute requiring an order granting executory process to contain a certificate that the copy of the act of mortgage is a true copy of the original is sufficient.—Advance Rumley Thresher Co. v. Shove, supra.

General statute requiring verification not applicable

A statute providing for the verification of petitions has been held not to contemplate nor provide for executory process and verification is not necessary.—Advance Rumley Thresher Co. v. Shove, supra.

Order of seizure and sale must be supported by authentic evidence exclusively; and where the record fails to show an offer or the filing of the mortgage note, the order of seizure will be set aside and the executory proceedings dismissed.—Commercial Credit Co. v. Melba Candy Co., 3 La. App. 267.

Variance between notes and mortgage

Executory process is invalid where issued on notes secured by a mortgage and there is a variance between the dates of the notes and the dates in the description thereof in the mortgage.—Southern Hardware & Woodstock Co. v. Smith, 123 So. 403. 11 La.App. 49.

properly issue on all the notes where the first is due and unpaid.⁵⁹

A demand by the mortgagee that the mortgagor turn over the property peaceably before placing the affidavit with the proper officer is not necessary if the mortgagor cannot be found in the county where the mortgage is being foreclosed.⁶⁰ A judgment entered on a verdict for the full amount of principal and interest is not erroneous because of the addition of an order that illegality be overruled and dismissed and that the mortgage fieri facias proceed for the aforesaid sums of principal, interest, and costs.⁶¹

Effect of foreclosure. Where the requirements of the statute for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage have substantially been complied with, and all defects are amendable, the proceeding is not void;⁶² and in such case the mortgagor cannot question the title of the purchaser at foreclosure sale.⁶³

Annexing affidavit to mortgage

(1) A provision of a statute requiring annexation of an affidavit of foreclosure to the mortgage or a verified copy thereof has been held merely directory.—Simpson v. Jones, 186 S.E. 558, 182 Ga. 544—Thigpen v. Vidalia Chemical Co., 156 S.E. 635, 42 Ga.App. 563—11 C.J. p 735 note 27.

(2) The failure to comply with such a provision has been held not to void the fieri facias issued pursuant to the affidavit.—Simpson v. Jones, supra.

(3) In one case, however, which apparently overlooked the decision in an earlier case, it was held that a failure to comply with this provision of the statute was fatal to plaintiff's case.—Hillis v. Comer, 79 S.E. 930, 14 Ga.App. 30.

Demanding payment at place where payable

In suit by executory process on mortgage note payable at certain place, it is unnecessary to allege payment was demanded at such

In accordance with the statutory provisions, proceedings must be brought in the county in which the mortgagor resides,⁶⁴ unless he resides without the state,⁶⁵ in which case the proper venue is the county in which the property is found.⁶⁶

§ 424. Affidavit

Although amendable to the same extent as ordinary declarations, affidavits in summary foreclosure proceedings must substantially comply with the mandatory provisions of the statutes.

An affidavit is a necessary basis of the mortgage foreclosure;⁶⁷ and it must substantially comply with the mandatory requirements of the statutes.⁶⁸ The affidavit must show on its face the jurisdiction of the court to which it is addressed,⁶⁹ by stating that defendant resides in the county where the mortgage is to be foreclosed,⁷⁰ and by stating the necessary facts to show the rights of the mortgagee and the object of the affidavit,⁷¹ and the grounds for suing out the affidavit.⁷² It must also be signed⁷³ and verified by the oath of the mortgagee or his attorney.⁷⁴ The affidavit must state the amount of principal and interest due to the mortgagee;⁷⁵ but an error in stating the amount of the mortgage will not invalidate the proceedings,⁷⁶ since only the amount actually due can be retained by the mortgagee.⁷⁷

In a suit involving an attack on a foreclosure proceeding, where the record does not disclose the contents of the affidavit and it was not attacked as insufficient, it will be presumed to state sufficient facts and to be in proper form.⁷⁸

Amendment. Under some statutes, which should be broadly and liberally construed,⁷⁹ affidavits are amendable to the same extent as ordinary declarations,⁸⁰ it being held that, if the requirements of the statute have been complied with substantially, a claimant is not hurt by amendable irregularities.⁸¹

By whom taken. A statute authorizing the judges of county courts to foreclose mortgages on personal property and liens has been held to authorize such judges to take statutory affidavits for the foreclosure of chattel mortgages.⁸²

§ 425. Execution

The issuance of execution, by a judge or clerk of court authorized to do so, is essential to a valid foreclosure, and the property should be sufficiently identified, and the execution is final process unless arrested by a counter affidavit.

The making of the affidavit alone is not sufficient; the issuing of the execution thereunder is also necessary to effect a valid foreclosure.⁸³ Although a statute authorizing judges of county courts to foreclose mortgages on personal property has been held to authorize such judges to issue executions on statutory affidavits,⁸⁴ when the affidavit is properly verified and filed,⁸⁵ execution thereon may be issued by a clerk of the superior court without a special order of court.⁸⁶ The execution dates from the making and filing of the mortgage for record,⁸⁷ and need not be entered on the general docket.⁸⁸ When placed in the levying officer's hands, he must proceed to sell the same although an attachment or execution is subsequently placed in his hands for execution against the same property.⁸⁹

It has been held that a levy will not be dismissed because of an indefinite description of the property in the mortgage;⁹⁰ nor will the execution and levy be quashed as illegal because the descriptions of the property vary from the descriptions in the mortgage, if both descriptions are equally applicable;⁹¹ and property, although inaccurately described in the mortgage and in the execution and levy, has been held sufficiently identified where it was the only property of such nature possessed by the mortgagor at the time of execution of the mortgage and was in fact the property levied on.⁹² The mortgagor need not point out the property sought by the sheriff under an execution to foreclose.⁹³ Where the statute prohibits a judgment for interest from bearing interest, the joinder of the principal and interest in one sum is ground for quashing the levy.⁹⁴

A statute authorizing a mortgagee to cause the property to be sold and the proceeds distributed among the lienors in order of priority does not apply where some of the encumbrances are put on the property by the vendee of the original mortgagor.⁹⁵ The dismissal of the levy as to some of the property with the consent of the mortgagee will not defeat the right of the mortgagee to sell the residue.⁹⁶

Amendment. A direction in the fieri facias in which plaintiff's name was inserted in place of defendant's, may be corrected by substituting the name of defendant in order to make the fieri facias conform to the affidavit;⁹⁷ and a transfer of a chattel mortgage fieri facias is amendable by the transferee with the transferor's consent.⁹⁸

As final process. Unless execution issued on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage be arrested by a counter affidavit, it is final process.⁹⁹

Sheriff's return or entry. An execution commanding a return at "our next justice court" has been held returnable to the justice's court of the district in which such magistrate presides.¹ Where the affidavit of illegality raised no issue as to the description, a sheriff's entry in the foreclosure that he levied on crops growing on the farm has been held sufficient,² and such a description has been held not to show on its face that the property levied on was realty;³ and an entry reciting that the sheriff levied the foreclosure on the within described property, coupled with evidence of actual seizure, is sufficient to show a valid levy.⁴

Unexplained dismissal of execution. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that an unexplained dismissal of a mortgage fieri facias entitles one to presume that the debt has been satisfied.⁵

§ 426. Affidavit of Illegality

Provided they are properly pleaded, a mortgagor may set up any defense in an affidavit of illegality which he could have set up in an ordinary suit on the demand, including a defense by way of recoupment.

When an execution has issued on the foreclosure of a mortgage as hereinbefore set forth in § 425, the mortgagor may file his affidavit of illegality to such execution in which he may set up and avail himself of any defense which he might have set up according to law in an ordinary suit on the demand secured by the mortgage and which goes to show that the amount claimed is not due,⁶ and defendant may not only contest the amount alleged to be due, but also the validity of the mortgage as to all or a part of the property sought to be subjected to the lien.⁷ The defense must be particularly set up, and a general denial, or a denial in general terms, is insufficient as it is but a plea of the general issue and not issuable, and not a denial of plaintiff's right to recover.⁸

While an affidavit is not defective for failing to allege a tender, before the filing of the affidavit, of the amount admittedly due, the failure of an affidavit, alleging fraud, to show that the mortgagor restored, or offered to restore, the property received under the contract before the filing of the affidavit will preclude rescission.⁹ However, a plea in an affidavit alleging that part of the property was returned to, and accepted by, the mortgagee because of defects, and alleging a total failure of consideration has been held a good plea of rescission, and such plea is not defeated because defendant denominated it as a failure of consideration.¹⁰ An affidavit of illegality which attempts to vary the terms of the mortgage by showing another and different con-

5. Dismissal not unexplained

A statement that the levy of a mortgage fieri facias was dismissed and the property not sold does not show dismissal of the levy "unexplained," as is contemplated by Civ. Code [1910] § 6047, which declares that in such case the debt is presumed satisfied.—Todd v. Hurst Supply Co., 86 S.E. 255, 17 Ga.App. 98.

Fraud

Mortgagor could set up seller's fraud in falsely representing that mortgage note given for purchase money was for amount of cost price.—Fellows v. Sapp, 163 S.E. 314, 45 Ga.App. 89.

Breach of warranty improperly pleaded

Court did not err in striking affidavit not alleging breach of warranty within time alleged to have been covered by warranty.—Cook v. Cobb & Roper, 95 S.E. 1022, 22 Ga. App. 328.

Question of fact not raised

Dispute raised by affidavit as to amount due by reason of admitted partial payment did not involve question of fact but only legal application of payment.—Humphreys v. W. L. Jessup & Sons, 158 S.E. 442, 43 Ga.App. 274.

sideration is insufficient and is properly stricken.¹¹

A failure to set up a defense by counter affidavit prevents the mortgagor from availing himself of any defenses after the foreclosure has been completed,¹² and an affidavit filed after a legal sale of the property under the mortgage execution is too late to convert the proceeding into mesne process and is dismissible on motion.¹³

Recoupment or set-off. While the mortgagor is permitted to avail himself of a valid defense by way of recoupment,¹⁴ he is not entitled to plead the defense of set-off in such a summary proceeding,¹⁵ since the latter defense is not one which goes to the justice of plaintiff's demand.¹⁶

Amendment; second affidavit. Although, in a proper case, defendant has the right to amend his affidavit of illegality interposed as a defense to an action to foreclose the mortgage,¹⁷ an affidavit making a denial in general terms is not amendable, as there is nothing to amend by,¹⁸ and a mortgagor has been held not to have the right to amend his affidavit so as to have a third person made a co-party plaintiff with the mortgagee on the ground that he was a joint owner of the mortgage and equally entitled to collect from the mortgagor, and that he had collected certain specified partial payments.¹⁹

While a second affidavit not alleging facts which could not have been discovered when the first affidavit was filed is properly stricken,²⁰ the rule that no second affidavit shall be received for causes which existed and were known, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence might have been known, at the filing of the first has no application where the first affidavit was void;²¹ and, where the first was fatally defective, because of a failure to give bond or make affidavit as to inability to do so and was voluntarily dismissed by defendant, it was not to be counted and one subsequently filed was not to be classed as a second affidavit under the rule just stated, although the rule might be otherwise if the parties had acted on the theory that the so-called first affidavit was valid, and facts had arisen whereby defendant should be estopped from asserting it was void.²²

Hearing. The burden is on the mortgagor or affiant to establish allegations of fact in the nature of an affirmative defense.²³ Where defendant fails to set up a defense, the exclusion of testimony relative thereto is proper;²⁴ and an affidavit which fails to state a defense is properly dismissed.²⁵

Affidavits of illegality to stay executions generally are treated in the C.J.S. title Executions §§ 147-150, also 23 C.J. p 546 note 42-p 553 note 92.

§ 427. Forthcoming Bond

The giving of a bond in substantial compliance with the applicable statute, or the filing of a pauper's affidavit, is a condition precedent to a trial on an affidavit of illegality; and on dismissal of the affidavit of illegality the bond is broken by a failure to produce the property without a demand therefor.

Plea of payment and recoupment

Where a party to a contract, agreeing to pay the other party for certain services when performed, advances money to the other party and takes a chattel mortgage, the other party, in defense to a foreclosure suit, may show that the advancement has been satisfied by performance of the original contract, and recover any balance due thereunder, such defense not being a set-off, but a plea of payment and recoupment.—Interstate Lumber Co. v. Amplifying preëxisting allegation

The allowance of an amendment to an affidavit of illegality, which merely amplified a preëxisting ground alleging payment and referred to a contract between the holder of a mortgage and the mortgagor, was not error, the material subject of inquiry being whether the mortgagor had paid the holder of the mortgage a sufficient amount to discharge it, either in money or in specifics accepted in lieu of money.—McCook v. —Phrases in Which Term Used.

Claim continual or continual claim. A mode through which a claimant of land by "continual claim" prevented the loss of his right of entry by the person in possession dying seized of the land.⁸⁹

Claim in equity. In simple cases in English practice where there is not any great conflict as to facts, and a discovery from a defendant was not sought, but a reference to chambers was nevertheless necessary before the final decree, which would be as of course, all parties being before the court, the summary proceeding by claim was sometimes adopted, thus obviating the recourse to plenary and protracted pleadings.⁹⁰

Claim of consuance. In practice, an intervention by a third person in a suit, claiming that he has rightful jurisdiction of the cause which plaintiff has commenced out of claimant's court; now obsolete.⁹¹

Claim of liberty. In English practice, a suit or petition to the queen, in the court of exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the attorney general.⁹²

Contingent claim. The phrase generally implies the existence of a contract or covenant on which the claim is based, and has been defined as meaning a claim which may never accrue, or one where the liability depends upon some future event which may or may not happen, and therefore makes it uncertain whether there ever will be a liability.⁹³ "Contingent claim" has been held not to include a claim for deficiency by a conditional vendor who, before his vendee made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, repossesses the property and resells it with a deficiency after such assignment,⁹⁴ a fixed amount due at a definite time in the future,⁹⁵ an absolute and unconditional claim, the time of payment only being uncertain;⁹⁶ nor an obligation certain as to liability and uncertain only as to amount;⁹⁷ has been contrasted with "accrued claim;"⁹⁸ and has been distinguished from "absolute debt," "liability," and "absolute liability,"⁹⁹ "conditional claim,"¹ and "debt."²

Legal claim. One which the party asserting it may enforce by action or by some proceeding at law or in equity.³

Possessory claim. A claim founded upon or growing out of possession, as distinguished from simply the claim of possession.⁴ The term has been used with reference to claims of those occupying lands under the provisions of the preemption laws.⁵

Private claim. One in behalf of a private interest, as distinguished from a claim of a public character.⁶ The term has been contrasted with "public claim."⁷

Public claim. A claim of a public nature or character.⁸

Unliquidated claim. One which one of the parties to the contract cannot alone render certain.⁹ It has been said that the term may be properly used to designate a claim with reference to which the holder, in order to obtain a settlement, must bear some further burden in order to have the amount

so fixed that the debtor is bound thereby.¹⁰ In particular connections, it has been said that a claim is generally called unliquidated if the amount thereof cannot be ascertained at the time of the trial by mere computation, based either on the terms of the obligation or some other accepted standard, and this regardless of whether the debtor disputes his liability in any or every respect;¹¹ and so "unliquidated claim" has been distinguished from "unliquidated debt."¹²

As a Verb

—Present Tense. In the intransitive sense, "claim" has been defined as meaning to be entitled to anything as a matter of right.¹⁰ Used in its transitive sense, it has been said that the term has the force of "asks for," or "demands as his due,"¹¹ and implies an active assertion of right and the demand for its recognition,¹² an assertion by words or other means,¹³ although it does not imply necessarily a demand made in words,¹⁴ and it has been said that, etymologically, it by no means implies that either place or presence is essential to its potency or completeness;¹⁵ and in this sense has been defined as meaning to affirm;¹⁶ to affirm to be one's own, or one's due;¹⁷ to ask or seek;¹⁸ to assert;¹⁹ to assert a right to, or an ownership of, as to claim a title;²⁰ to challenge as a right;²¹

to demand as due;²² to demand or require;²³ to lay claim to;²⁴ to obtain by virtue of authority, right, or supposed right.²⁵ The word has also been commonly used as meaning to hold or maintain as a fact or as true;²⁶ to hold to be true against implied denial or doubt.²⁷

In particular connections or contexts "claim" has been held equivalent to "assume" see Assume 7 C.J. S. p 105 note 25, but not equivalent to "has a right to," or "owns;"²⁸ and the use of "insist," "state," "think," and "urge" as synonymous has been said to be incorrect.²⁹

—Claimed. "Claimed," in the past tense, has been employed as synonymous with, or equivalent to, "alleged" see Allege 3 C.J.S. p 885 note 75, "assumed" see Assume 7 C.J.S. p 106 note 45, "contended,"³⁸ and "insisted."³⁹

Phrases: "Claimed by him,"⁴⁰ "claimed by them,"⁴¹ "claimed or recoverable,"⁴² "claimed to be his self-defense,"⁴³ "claimed to be this self-defense,"⁴⁴ "it is claimed,"⁴⁵ and "owned or claimed."⁴⁶

—Claiming. The present participle occurs in phrases which have received judicial construction, such as "all claiming under him," see All 3 C.J.S. p 870 note 62, "any one claiming under the same bond and affidavit," see Any 3 C.J.S. p 1413 note 42, "claiming under,"⁴⁷ and "rightfully claiming under, or in trust for him."⁴⁸

As an Adjective

As an adjective, "claim" has been used in phrases which have received judicial construction, such as "claim affidavit," see the C.J.S. title Executions § 105, 23 C.J. p 456 note 13, "claim agent" see the C.J.S. titles Corporations § 1050, also 14a C.J. p 435 note 71-p 436 note 78, and Railroads § 15, also 51 C.J. p 426 notes 92-1, "claim cases,"⁴⁹ "claim check" and "claim check system," see Carriers § 866, "claim committee,"⁵⁰ and "claim property bond," see the C.J.S. titles Executions §§ 176, 192, also 23 C.J. p 590 note 89-p 591 note 2, p 612 notes 33-40, and Replevin § 103, also 54 C.J. p 477 note 69-p 478 note 75.

CLAIMANT. A person who claims, demands anything as his right, or who makes a claim in an administrative proceeding;⁵¹ a voluntary applicant for justice, as distinguished from one compelled to answer for his wrong.⁵² In a broader sense, however, the term might be used to designate the owner of property, whether prosecuting or defending his right to such property, although this does not agree with the ordinary legal meaning of the word.⁵³ In a particular connection, the term was restricted in its application to claimants whose claims were liqui-

CLAMO; CLAMARE. In law Latin, a verb meaning to call, cry out, shout aloud, to complain with a loud voice.⁸¹

CLAMOR. In old English law, a claim or complaint, an outcry. In the civil law, a claimant, hence a debt, or anything claimed from another; also a proclamation, or an accusation.⁸²

CLAMP. As a noun, an instrument of wood, metal, or other rigid material, used to hold anything, or to hold or fasten two or more things together by pressure, so as to keep them in the same relative position, and specifically, in the manufacture of can bodies, it has been defined as an adjustable band of iron which engages the unfolded edge of the tin and holds it fast against the horn.⁸³

As a verb, it has been said to convey the conception of the progressive application of mechanical force, has been defined as meaning to fasten or secure, and has been compared with, and distinguished from, "to draw" and "to wedge."⁸⁴

CLAM, VI, AUT PRECARIO. A technical phrase of the Roman law, meaning by force, stealth, or importunity.⁸⁵

CLANDESTINE. As defined by Webster, withdrawn from public notice for an evil purpose, kept secret, hidden, or private.⁸⁶

Clandestine marriage. Legally, one contracted without observing the conditions precedent prescribed by law, such as publication of bans, procuring a license, or the like.⁸⁷

Other phrases: "Clandestine importation,"⁸⁸ "clandestine introduction," see the C.J.S. title Customs Duties § 246, also 17 C.J. p 666 note 8, and "clandestine running and landing."⁸⁹

fines the word as meaning secretly; privately; furtively.

Phrases: "Bring into . . . clandestinely," see Bring 11 C.J.S. p 1140 note 66, "clandestinely and without entering the same at the . . . Customs Office" and "clandestinely introduce."⁹⁰

CLAP. Vulgar name for "gonorrhea."⁹¹

CLARE CONSTAT. Literally "It clearly appears." In Scotch law, the name of a precept for giving seizin of lands, to an heir; so called from its initial words.⁹²

CLAREMETHEN. In old Scotch law, the warranty of stolen cattle or goods; the law regulating such warranty.⁹³

CLARENDON, ASSIZE OF. See Assise or Assize 6 C.J.S. p 1435 note 27.

CLARENDON, CONSTITUTIONS OF. The constitutions of Clarendon were certain statutes made in the reign of Henry II of England, at a parliament held at Clarendon (A. D. 1164), by which the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the exemption they claimed from secular jurisdiction.⁹⁴

CLARIFICATIO. Latin, in old Scotch law, a making clear; the purging or clearing (clenging) of an assise.⁹⁵ In ecclesiastical Latin, a glorification.⁹⁶

CLARIFICATION. When speaking of making a meaning clear, as of a law or a writing, it has been said that "clarification" means that the thing to be clarified exists, but is uncertain and cloudy, never, however, nonexistent.⁹⁷

CLARIFY. The Century Dictionary defines the word as meaning to make clear.

CLASSIARIUS. A seaman or soldier serving at sea.²⁴

CLASSICI. Latin, in the Roman law, marines; also persons employed in servile duties on board vessels.²⁵

CLASSIFICATION. It has been said that, in general terms, the word means the grouping of things in speculation or practice because they agree with one another in certain particulars and differ from other things in those same particulars, and that it is essentially the same in law as in other departments of knowledge or practice, the classification depending on the object in view, or the purpose,²⁶ so that, as applied to legislation, "classification" may be made with reference to similarity of situation, circumstances, requirements, and convenience best to subserve the public interest,²⁷ and may have two meanings, one primary, signifying a division required by statute, fundamental and substantial, and the other secondary, signifying an arrangement or enumeration adopted for convenience only, a creature, not of the statute, but of local rules, formal and not substantial.²⁸ Depending on the purpose and context of the particular statute, the word has been defined as meaning a characterization through the selection of some quality or feature;²⁹ a grouping of classes, or a putting together of like subjects or facts under a common designation;³⁰ the grouping together of communities or public bodies which by reason of similarity of situation, circumstances, requirements, and convenience will have their public interests best subserved by similar regulations.³¹ "Classification," has been held to involve exclusion as well as inclusion,³² and, if valid, to imply a reasonable and just relation to the act with respect to which the classification is made,³³ a substantial basis therefor,³⁴ and good faith, as distinguished from wisdom.³⁵ "Classification" has been distinguished from "assessment" see Assessment 6 C.J.S. p 1025 note 39, "class legislation" see the C.J.S. title Constitutional Law § 489, also 12 C.J. p 1128 note 11—p 1131 note 36, "discrimination,"³⁶ and "power of the legislature."³⁷

In English practice

In the practice of the English chancery division, where there are several parties to an administration action, including those who have been served with notice of the decree or judgment, and it appears to the judge, or chief clerk, that any of them form a class having the same interest, for example, residuary legatees, he may require them to be represented by one solicitor in order to prevent the expense of each of them attending by separate solicitors. This is termed "classifying the interests of the parties attending," or, shortly, "classifying," or "classification." In practice the term is also applied to the directions given by the chief clerk as to which of the parties are to attend on each of the accounts and inquiries directed by the judgment.—Black L.D.

CLAUDERE. Latin, in old English law, to inclose, hence to turn open fields into closes and inclosures; also, to close, finish, or end.⁶¹

CLAUSE.

As a Noun

A single paragraph or subdivision of a legal document;⁶² sometimes a sentence or part of a sentence.⁶³ Specifically, the term has been defined as meaning one of those distinct and generally numbered subdivisions into which wills are frequently aperted, or an entire unconnected provision making disposition of property;⁶⁴ some collocation of words in a will which, when removed therefrom, still leaves the rest of the will intelligible.⁶⁵

Clause irritant. In Scotch law, by this clause, in a deed or settlement, the acts or deeds of a tenant for life or other proprietor, contrary to the conditions of his right, become null and void; and by the "resolutive" clause such right becomes resolved and extinguished.⁶⁶

Clause potestative. In French law, the name given to the clause whereby one party to a contract reserves to himself the right to annul it.⁶⁷

In its natural state, it is a part of the soil and regarded as part of the real estate, and as an essential element in the manufacture of brick, completely changing its form and character and entirely losing its identity, as clay, in the manufactured state.⁹⁴ In manufacturing generally, it is regarded as a raw material.⁹⁵

Fire clay. The particular kind of clay used in the manufacture of fire brick.⁹⁶

Modeling clay. A substance used by artists and others engaged in plastic work, for making busts and models. It is also sometimes called "plastilina."⁹⁷

Other phrases: "Furnishers of any ore, clay, coal, or other raw material;"⁹⁸ and also, adjectively, "clay mines" or "clay pits."⁹⁹

CLEAN.

As a Verb

In a particular context, the word has been held to imply an undertaking to do no more than clean the superficial area as distinguished from an undertaking to remove stains in stonework several inches in depth.¹

Phrases: "Clean down thoroughly all the front and side of [said] building;"² and also "cleaned and disinfected,"³ "cleaned rice,"⁴ and "cleaned wool."⁵

As an Adjective

A term of variable meaning, owing to the connection in which it is used. In its primary sense, "clean" has been said to be a term of certain and generally understood meaning, frequently used in ordinances and laws defining certain nuisances,⁶ and also applicable to a great variety of merchandise,⁷ and has been defined as meaning free from dirt, filth, impurity, foreign or undesirable matter, soil or stain; pure; as clean water.⁸ In derived senses, the word has been defined as meaning completely cleared or rid of something; free from bungling, not awkward, or dexterous, as a clean track; free from knots or knot holes, clear, or smooth, as clean timber; having no blemish or imperfections, complete, perfect, or whole, as clean copy; irreproachable, innocent of fraud or wrongdoing, without defilement, morally pure, as clean literature, or a clean man; also ceremonially pure as conforming to the ceremonial law; said among the Jews of persons, animals, etc.; and also free from exceptions or reservations.⁹

Clean bill of health. One certifying that no contagious or infectious disease exists, or certifying as to healthy conditions generally without exception or reservation.¹⁰

Clean oil. A term having a well-understood meaning in the trade, and defined as such a petroleum liquid as carries in cohesion with it three per cent or less by volume of water and sediment.¹¹ It is also called "dry oil," and is distinguished from "wet oil."¹²

CLEAR.

As a Verb

—Present Tense. As defined in the Century Dictionary, to free from any impediment or encumbrance, or from obstructions; to leave no doubt. In maritime law, to satisfy the customs, harbor dues, and the like, and to obtain from the governmental authority of the port leave to depart.¹⁶ It has been said that, as applied to ordinary wood or timber land, the word may have a definite meaning, namely, to remove the timber, but not the stumps,¹⁷ but that it means something else when applied to cut over land, and may then mean either to remove the saplings and brush which had grown up since the first clearing, or to remove the old stumps so that the land could be put under plow.¹⁸

Clear the title. The phrase has been said to have a well-understood meaning in real estate law; to refer to all such acts, steps, or proceedings as are necessary to render the title good and marketable, including the opinion of counsel that this has been done; and to be equivalent to "cure the title," "remove cloud from title," and "straighten out the title."¹⁹

Other phrases: "Clear and fence,"²⁰ "clear any land or improve the same,"²¹ "clear out,"²² "clear" . . . seven acres of the land,"²³ "clear . . . the brush,"²⁴ and "'clear' the transactions of the day."²⁵

—Cleared. The past tense and past participle of the verb.

Cleared land. Improved land, the term conveying the idea of cultivation, as contrasted with "unimproved land."²⁶

—Clearing. In maritime law, the departure of a vessel from port after complying with the customs and health laws and like local regulations;²⁷ and in mercantile law, sometimes used in the plural, a method of making exchanges and settling differences in mutual accounts, usually between banks or bankers.²⁸

Clearing land. The word "clearing," as commonly used in connection with land, imports no ambiguity, although its meaning may be enlarged by the parties using it; and so the phrase "clearing lands" may have different significations in various localities. In timbered lands, in the absence of words of limitation by the parties using it, the term has been held to mean removing therefrom all the timber of every size, but not to include taking out the stumps,²⁹ while in arid regions, where land must be prepared for irrigation, the clearing of such land has been held to mean not only the removal or destruction of the brush, but the plowing or breaking up of the roots as well.³⁰

Other phrases: "Clearing house" or "clearing houses," see Banks and Banking § 1074, "clearing house certificate," see Banks and Banking § 1076, and Bills and Notes §§ 7, 23, and "clearing loan;"³¹ also "in payment of clearings."³²

CLEMENT'S INN. An inn of chancery.²⁰

CLENGE. Literally, "To cleanse or clean." In old Scotch law, to clear or acquit of a criminal charge.²¹

CLEP AND CALL. In old Scotch practice, a solemn form of words prescribed by law and used in criminal cases, as in pleas of wrong and unlaw.²²

CLEPSYDRA. A water clock; an hour glass. Among the Romans, "clepsydras" were used by speakers to measure their discourse, and were of different length, sometimes three of them to the hour.²³

CLERGY. In English law, that division of the people which comprehends all persons in holy orders, and in ecclesiastical offices, as distinguished from the laity; the whole body of clergymen or ministers of religion. Also used as an abbreviation for "benefit of clergy."²⁴

Regular clergy. In old English law, monks who lived secundum regulas (according to the rules) of their respective houses or societies were so denominated, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who performed their ministry in the world, in seculo, and who from thence were called "secular clergy."²⁵

Secular clergy. In ecclesiastical law, this term is

16. Beyond conjecture and presumption

"By 'clearness and certainty' is meant, generally, that there must be sufficient positive facts shown to take the matter without the realm of conjecture and presumption."—Marshall v. Fleming, 53 P. 620, 621, 11 Colo.App. 515.

applied to the parochial clergy, who perform their ministry "in seculo" [in the world] and who are thus distinguished from the monastic or "regular" clergy.²⁶

CLERGYABLE. In old English law, allowing of, or entitled to, the benefit of clergy (privilegium clericale); used of persons or crimes.²⁷

CLERGYMAN. A member of the clergy.²⁸ See the C.J.S. title Religious Societies § 39, also 54 C.J. p 38 note 64—p 39 note 95. Used in particular connections see the C.J.S. titles Charities § 18, Juries § 153, also 35 C.J. p 255 note 95, Libel and Slander § 112, also 36 C.J. p 1261 notes 93—95, and Marriage § 29, also 38 C.J. p 1311 notes 42—53.

Phrase: "Clergyman or other minister of any religion."²⁹

CLERICAL. Of, or pertaining or relating to, a clerk, copyist, or writer, or to writing;³⁰ also pertaining to clergymen.³¹

Clerical assistance. As applied to assistance in the discharge of official duties, it has been said that the term implies merely such assistance as aids in the execution of official authority by the public officer himself, such as writing letters, making entries of record, copying grants and the like service, being distinguished from "official assistance."³²

mitted;³³ more specifically, a mistake in copying or writing;³⁴ a mistake which naturally excludes any idea that its insertion was made in the exercise of any judgment or discretion, or in pursuance of any determination;³⁵ an error made by a clerk in transcribing, or otherwise, which must be apparent on the face of the record, and capable of being corrected by reference to the record only.³⁶ It has been said that a clerical error exists when without evident intention one word is written for another, when the statement of some detail is omitted the lack of which is not a cause of nullity, or when there are mistakes in proper names or amounts made in copying, which do not change the general sense of a record,³⁷ and that it implies negligence or carelessness.³⁸

As particularly applied to errors in judicial proceedings, it has been said that the term has been used somewhat loosely in the decisions, some of the cases indicating that it is limited to error in transcribing figures, or the addition of figures, or mere misprision,³⁹ while others employ it in a broad sense to include all such errors, being matters of record, as intervene in the progress of a cause, whether committed by clerk, court, or counsel, to which judicial sanction or discretion cannot reasonably be said to have been applied,⁴⁰ but not to extend to errors of omission or inclusion which involve the exercise of judgment or discretion in pursuance of a determination,⁴¹ intentional acts based on a mistaken belief,⁴² or on a misconstruction of evidence or a misapplication of the law thereto, even though the court is misled therein by counsel.⁴³

In particular situations, a "clerical error" has been held to include a failure of a judgment to award interest admittedly due,⁴⁴ a failure to enter a judicial order actually made,⁴⁵ a misspelled word,⁴⁶ an arithmetical mistake in calculation,⁴⁷ and an improper placing of a case by the clerk on the trial calendar;⁴⁸ and not to include a failure to state that property was not benefited by an improvement,⁴⁹ or an erroneous listing of fixtures as personal property.⁵⁰ "Clerical error" has been distinguished from "error of substance"⁵¹ and "judicial error."⁵²

As to the effect of clerical errors in particular instruments, legal provisions or proceedings see Descriptive-Word Index.

Clerical misprision. A mistake or a fraud perpetrated by a clerk of court, which is susceptible of demonstration by the face of the record.⁵³ It has been said that, by a universal rule of practice, the term implies that the record shall furnish the data upon which the correction can be made,⁵⁴ but that a record which contains merely a bare allegation of the existence of such data, as distinguished from the data itself, does not satisfy the rule.⁵⁵ "Clerical misprision" has been held to include an error in calculation of interest added to the face of the note period,⁵⁷ an entry of judgment before the case stood for trial,⁵⁸ a judgment prematurely entered,⁵⁹ and, by the terms of a statute, a judgment against a person of unsound mind before a defense or report is filed.⁶⁰

Clerical tonsure. The having of the head shaven, which was formerly peculiar to clerks or persons in orders, and which the coifs worn by sergeants at law are supposed to have been introduced to conceal.⁶¹

Clerical work. In ordinary, popular speech, the kind of work in which a clerk is engaged; and in practice the term is not confined to one who is always occupied as a mere amanuensis, scribe, or transcriber, or to one who does only stenographic or typewriting work or who is confined to one desk, but is also applied to a file clerk or supply clerk, who consults books and files, makes searches, and uses the adding machine and other equipment, and the work is still clerical notwithstanding changes or improvements in the appliances for performing it.⁶² The phrase has been held to include ticket selling in a moving picture house.⁶³ "Clerical work" is contrasted with "manual labor," and, in a particular connection, with work that brings the employee into the field of "hazards of the business," although one whose work is clerical may be subject to such haz-

CLERICO CONVICTO COMMISSO GAOLÆ IN DEFECTU ORDINARIJ DELIBERANDO. An ancient writ, that lay for the delivery to his ordinary of a clerk convicted of felony, where the ordinary did not challenge him according to the privilege of clerks.⁸¹

CLERICO INFRA SACROS ORDINES CONSTITUTO, NON ELIGENDO IN OFFICIUM. A writ directed to those who had thrust a bailiwick or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him.⁸²

CLERICUM ADMITTENDUM. See Admittendo Clerico 2 C.J.S. p 362 notes 1, 2.

CLERICUS (plural CLERICI). Generally, a clergyman or priest.⁸³ In Roman law, a minister of religion in the Christian church, an ecclesiastic, or priest, a general term, including bishops, priests, deacons, and others of inferior order; also the amanuenses of the judges or courts of the king.⁸⁴ In old English law, a clerk or priest, a person in holy orders,⁸⁵ including inferior ecclesiastical officers as well as those in orders, and those who were not authorized to administer the several sacraments as well as those who were; the regular and secular clergy, not all of whom were authorized to solemnize marriage; and in the technical language of the law, an ordained minister of religion, a person within holy orders, being equivalent to, and descriptive of, clergymen in England where there are various grades of clergy with various privileges and emoluments, some sinecures, others with cures;⁸⁶ a secular priest, in opposition to a regular one;⁸⁷ also a clerk or person who used his pen in any courts, or otherwise, hence a clerk of a court, an officer whose duties were to issue writs, enroll pleas, etc.;⁸⁸ and also an officer of the royal household, having charge of the receipt and payment of moneys, etc.⁸⁹

CLERK.

As a Noun

—Ecclesiastical Sense. Originally, the term was used to designate a person who could read, a scholar; a term subsequently used to designate a secular priest, in opposition to a religious or a regular; but later as a "nomen generalissimum" to include both regular and secular clergy.² To explain another particular application of the word, it has been said that historically the law and the gospel flowed from the same source and judges of courts were taken from the ranks of the clergy, and that, because of the manifest impossibility of the judge attending to the records and issuing writs, new offices were created to take over the performance of these clerical duties.³

—Ordinary Sense. "Clerk" as a general term has been defined as meaning one engaged in, or hired to do, clerical work, such as bookkeeping, copying, transcribing, typing, writing, tabulating, etc., without special executive qualifications and without being in charge of work of special importance.⁴

—Mercantile Sense. The term has had wide application in business and commercial pursuits, and has been used to designate an assistant employed to aid in any business, mercantile or otherwise, subject to the advice and direction of his employer;⁵ an assistant in a shop or store;⁶ an assistant in a shop or store who sells goods or keeps accounts;⁷ a person in the employ of a merchant who attends only to a part of his business, while the merchant himself superintends the whole;⁸ one who hires his services to an employer at a fixed price, under a stipulation to do and perform some specific duty or labor which requires the exercise of skill;⁹ and implies knowledge by the clerk of the business in which he is employed,¹⁰ his subjection to the or-lers and control of his employer,¹¹ and a power of control in someone.¹²

—Administrative or Executive Sense. In an administrative sense, "clerk" has been defined as meaning an assistant; a subordinate;¹³ a hired assistant in an office, counting house, library or the like;¹⁴ a secretary;¹⁵ a subordinate who writes letters or keeps books;¹⁶ a subordinate functionary, whose duties are ministerial and clerical in character;¹⁷ one employed in an office, public or private, for keeping records or accounts, whose business is to write or register, in proper form, the transactions of the tribunal or body to which he belongs.¹⁸ Ordinarily the word does not connote supervisory or managerial powers, but, under the circumstances of a particular case, it may imply a certain discretion in the performance of duties which are, incidentally and secondarily, of that nature.¹⁹ "Clerk" as an officer of a court see the C.J.S. title Clerks of Courts § 1.

—Compared with Other Terms. In one or another of the senses above indicated, and having regard, of course, to the circumstances of its use, "clerk" has been held to include a bookkeeper,²⁰ a cashier see Cashier ante p 24 notes 32, 33, an amanuensis,²¹ an apprentice in a solicitor's office see the C.J.S. title Attorney and Client § 8, an assistant cashier of a national bank,²² an employee in a surrogate's office,²³ a person employed, at a monthly salary, as a registered pharmacist,²⁴ a salesman in a store or shop,²⁵ a shop assistant,²⁶ a stenographer and office girl, who served as an assistant in the office of her employer,²⁷ a stenographer in charge of office supplies,²⁸ or a teller in a bank;²⁹ but not to include a bookkeeper, for service of summons on corporation,³⁰ a cashier see Cashier ante p 24 notes 32, 33, a certified public accountant carrying on his profession on his own responsibility,³¹ a clerk while acting as assistant to the superintendent of water works in the collecting and handling of funds,³² a hotel bookkeeper and clerk,³³ a manager,³⁴ a manager in charge of a branch store of a broker in another city,³⁵ a merchant appraiser,³⁶ an adjuster,³⁷ an assistant district attorney,³⁸ an attor-

I. DEFINITION, NATURE OF OFFICE, APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE§ 1. Definition and Distinctions

The clerk of a court is a ministerial officer intrusted with the duty of keeping its records, issuing its process, entering its judgments and the like. The clerk has been distinguished from a master in chancery and from a receiver of the court.

A clerk of court is an officer of a court of justice who has charge of the clerical part of its business, who keeps its records and seal, issues process, enters judgments and orders, gives certified copies from the records and the like.¹ While the clerk of a court belongs to the judicial as distinguished from the executive or legislative branch of government,² his office is essentially a ministerial one,³ and is in no way necessary to the existence of a court;⁴ that is, while the clerk is an officer of the court,⁵ a public officer,⁶ and an "officer of the law",⁷ he is not a judicial officer,⁸ nor is he the court.⁹ In some jurisdictions, however, the clerk is regarded as an essential, constituent part of a court.¹⁰ Where the office is created or recognized by the constitution of the state, it is of course a constitutional officer;¹¹ and where the office is created by statute, it is a statutory office.¹² The clerks of particular courts have been held to be state officers,¹³ although the clerk of a county court is not a state officer,¹⁴ and the clerks of some courts are county officers;¹⁵ but the clerk of a police court is neither a county nor a township officer,¹⁶ the clerk of a municipal court has been held neither a county officer nor an officer of an inferior court,¹⁷ and where the clerk is a constitutional state officer, he is not a city officer.¹⁸ Reference must be had to the constitutional and statutory provisions of the state, and the construction placed thereon by the courts, in order to determine what courts are referred to when the expression "office of clerk" or "clerk of court" is employed in a constitution, statute, or contract.¹⁹

Judge as clerk. Under constitutional or statutory provisions, a judge may also serve as clerk of his own court.²⁰

Master in chancery distinguished. While at an early date the duties which are now devolved on the master of chancery were performed by certain clerks of the court of chancery,²¹ there is at present a clear distinction between a master in chancery and a clerk of court,²² and where the two offices are combined in one,²³ the office has a dual character.²⁴

The offices of receiver and clerk of court are distinct in their nature and functions;²⁵ and a clerk of court is not, by virtue of his office, a receiver of the court.²⁶

Ordinary as clerk. In some states an ordinary acts both as judge and as clerk.²⁷

Prothonotary. The chief or principal clerk of the court is sometimes called a prothonotary,²⁸ and it has been said that a prothonotary is merely the clerk of the court.²⁹

Matters regarding the creation of the office of clerk of court usually depend on constitutional and statutory provisions.³⁰ Authority to establish a court necessarily includes the power to provide for a clerk and to define his duties;³¹ and the fact that the clerk of another court has been for several years allowed to perform the duties and receive the emoluments incident to the clerkship of a newly established court will not deprive the legislature of power to establish a separate office of clerk of the latter court, with the necessary effect of depriving the clerk of the other court of the power to discharge the duties of the new office on account of a constitutional prohibition against one person holding two offices.³² However, a statute creating a new court which provides that the clerk of a certain existing court shall perform the duties of clerk of the new court simply imposes additional duties on the clerk of the existing court and does not create a new office,³³ at least where no compensation is provided,³⁴ although it has also been held that a statute authorizing the clerk of one court to perform certain duties of the clerk of another court violates constitutional provisions forbidding more than one clerk for the second court.³⁵ The title of the position is not controlling in determining the validity of a statute creating a position involving performance of clerical duties for a court.³⁶ Where a territory is admitted as a state, the status of a clerk under the state government may be allowed to remain temporarily the same as it was under the territorial government.³⁷

Clerk of justice's court. In some states the law has created no such office as that of a clerk of a justice of the peace,³⁸ but in some other states the contrary is, or has been true, as to justices' courts in particular cities.³⁹

As dependent on population of county. Where, by statute, the existence of the office depends on the population of the county, the fact that the county attains the required population does not authorize an immediate election, but the office is to be filled at the next regular election;⁴⁰ but it has been held that a county whose population has reached the required number more than thirty days before a general election can elect a clerk, notwithstanding the fact that the population was less when the last census was taken.⁴¹ A statute, providing that, subject to the county commissioners' approval, the county judge may appoint a clerk in a county having a certain population if in their judgment the public interest requires such appointment, is permissive merely.⁴²

Where the clerk's right to hold office depends on the population of the county, the burden is on him to prove its sufficiency in quo warranto proceedings to oust him.⁴³

b. Abolition

On abolition of a court the office of clerk appurtenant thereto is ordinarily also abolished. Clerkships created by constitution may not be abolished by statute.

Where a court is abolished the office of clerk falls with it;⁴⁴ and so, where by statute the jurisdiction of one court is transferred to another, the clerk of the former ceases to have any official powers;⁴⁵ and the clerk of the court to which the jurisdiction is transferred usually succeeds to the powers, duties, emoluments, and liabilities of the clerk of the superseded court;⁴⁶ but the rule that repeals by implication are not favored applies to statutes claimed to have impliedly abolished the office of clerk.⁴⁷ Furthermore, if the office of clerk was created by the constitution, the legislature may not abolish it,⁴⁸ where it has not been abolished by the adoption of amendments to the constitution.⁴⁹ A constitutional provision entitling a county to two clerks is not violated by a statute enacted by a legislature which erroneously assumed that the county was entitled to only one clerk but which did not carry its error into the statute.⁵⁰

§ 3. Appointment or Election

The appointment or election of clerks of court is ordinarily governed by statutory or constitutional provisions, and in compliance therewith the clerk may be elected by the people or appointed.

Particular constitutional and statutory provisions control the appointment or election of clerks of court.⁵¹

In the absence of anything to the contrary in the constitution, the subject may properly be regulated by the legislature,⁵² but where the constitution itself provides a method, that governs, and a statute attempting to provide a different method is void.⁵³ Sometimes it is provided that a clerk of one court shall be clerk of another court, and statutes of this character are not violative of constitutional provisions relating to the election of clerks of courts,⁵⁴ but when not so provided by law, a clerk of one court is not the clerk of another court.⁵⁵

Where the time of holding elections for the office of clerk of court is not prescribed by the organic law, the legislature may properly regulate such matter.⁵⁶

Appointment by judge or court. Under some statutes a judge is authorized within the limits of his discretion to appoint a clerk of court,⁵⁷ and it has been held that a chancellor appointed pro tempore may himself appoint a clerk of court.⁵⁸ Where the court is empowered by the constitution to make the appointment, the act is deemed that of the court and not that of the individuals comprising the court;⁵⁹ and after the appointment has been made the power cannot be resumed or again exercised until a vacancy shall regularly occur,⁶⁰ and such appointment is not affected by any subsequent change in the number of persons composing that court.⁶¹ However, before the person appointed has qualified, it has been held that the appointment may be rescinded and another person appointed.⁶²

Where election by the people is required by the constitution, the power to appoint such officers cannot be conferred by the legislature on the governor;⁶³ nor can it be properly provided that, on ouster of the clerk for bribery in the election, the next highest candidate may have judgment for the office.⁶⁴ Likewise, where, under the law, the office of clerk of a particular court is to be filled by election, the judge of such court has no authority to fill the office by appointment.⁶⁵

Where a judge acts as his own clerk, he may empower another to act in his stead, without any order entered of record.⁶⁶ Some statutes authorizing probate judges to appoint clerks are regarded as permissive only and to leave it optional with the judges of probate as to whether they shall or shall not make appointments.⁶⁷

Appointment by de facto court or judge. Since the acts of a de facto officer are valid, it follows that the appointment of a clerk by a court or judge de facto, acting under color of office, is valid and constitutes such clerk an officer de jure.⁶⁸ Therefore, the subsequent appointment by the judge de jure of a clerk does not make the latter an officer de jure, and the first appointee cannot be ousted by him;⁶⁹ but it has been held in one jurisdiction that if quo warranto is instituted by a clerk to establish his rights to the office, he cannot recover on proof of title to the office derived from an appointment by a de facto judge.⁷⁰ The validity of an appointment by a de facto court or judge cannot be questioned collaterally.⁷¹ Where a provisional government was not a de facto government, the official acts of a person appointed thereby county court clerk are not valid for any purpose.⁷²

Questions concerning vacancies are treated in § 7 infra.

§ 4. Eligibility and Qualification

- a. Eligibility
- b. Qualification

a. Eligibility

Eligibility to the office of clerk of court is largely a matter of statutory and constitutional provision. Conviction of misconduct in office renders the incumbent ineligible.

The question of eligibility to the office of clerk of court depends on the same principles that apply to other public officers, that is, it is largely a question of construction of constitutional and statutory requirements relating to officers generally and such specific provisions as may exist relative to the office of clerk,⁷³ and it is usually required that the clerk shall be a resident of the county or judicial district in which he acts.⁷⁴ Conviction for misconduct in office renders a clerk of court ineligible to hold office for the remainder of the term for which he was elected.⁷⁵

Where the matter of eligibility to the office of clerk of court is controlled by constitutional mandate, the legislature may not add a disability unprovided for by the constitution.⁷⁶

Women. It has been held that at common law and in the absence of an enabling act or constitutional provision, a woman is ineligible to the office of clerk of court,⁷⁷ although other authority holds that a woman is eligible to the office in the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision requiring the clerk to be a male.⁷⁸

b. Qualification

- (1) In general
- (2) Bond

(1) In General

Statutory and constitutional provisions control the matter of a clerk of court's qualification, and in the absence of express requirement he need not produce his commission before qualifying.

Matters relating to the qualification and induction into office of clerks of courts depend for the most part on particular constitutional or statutory provisions.⁷⁹ A proper offer to qualify should not be refused.⁸⁰

Commission. In the absence of a statute requiring it, the clerk need not produce his commission before he will be allowed to qualify.⁸¹

(2) Bond

Clerks of courts are ordinarily required to give bonds, which should be executed in the manner and form prescribed by statute, although a substantial compliance is sufficient.

A usual statutory requirement is that before entering on the discharge of his duties the clerk shall give an official bond,⁸² and it seems that a clerk may be required to give bond and security for the faithful performance of his official duties even by a statute enacted after he came into office.⁸³ At any rate, a bond voluntarily given by him before the statute requiring it became effective is a valid and binding obligation.⁸⁴ Some statutes relating to the appointment of a clerk pro tempore do not require the giving of a bond;⁸⁵ and it has been held that where a clerk is appointed in vacation he has the whole of the next term of court to give the bond required by law.⁸⁶

Form and sufficiency. The statutes generally prescribe the substance and sometimes the form of the bond which is required to be given by a clerk of court before entering on the duties of his office.⁸⁷ To be sufficient as a statutory bond, the bond given must be executed⁸⁸ and conditioned substantially as required by statute;⁸⁹ but a mere deviation from the phraseology of the statute will not destroy its force and effect as a statutory obligation,⁹⁰ nor does surplusage deprive it of its character as a statutory bond so far as it embodies statutory conditions;⁹¹ neither does a slight omission which can be supplied by construction render the bond void,⁹² nor does such omission make it other than the statutory bond.⁹³ It has also been held that a mere irregularity, such as the fact that the bond runs to "the people" of the state or county, does not render it void;⁹⁴ and that delay in the approval of the bond does not deprive the clerk of his right to the office where the delay is not due to his fault.⁹⁵ In accordance with well settled principles a bond valid as a common-law obligation is sufficient, although not in the statutory form.⁹⁶ However, a bond is wholly void where the obligor is also named as one of the obligees.⁹⁷

Approval by court. It has been held that a county court may postpone the hearing for approval of a court clerk's bond, and retains jurisdiction to approve the bond after the time set by statute.⁹⁸

Filing and recording. The official bond of a clerk of court should be filed in accordance with applicable statutory requirements.⁹⁹

While a clerk of court's bond should be recorded, failure to record the same does not necessarily preclude a recovery thereon.¹

New or additional bond. Some statutes require or provide for the giving of a new or additional bond by a clerk of court under certain circumstances; and where such a statute contemplates that the new bond shall be ordered by the court, a bond filed without any order by the court is void.² A statute making county clerks ex officio clerks of the district courts has been construed not to require that they should give other and additional bonds for the discharge of their duties as clerks of such courts.³

Lien of sureties on fees. The official fees of a clerk belong to his estate, like other property, and the sureties on his official bond have no lien on them for their indemnity, nor right of priority over other creditors.⁴

§ 5. De Facto Officers

One exercising the functions of clerk of court under a mere color of right is a de facto clerk and his acts may not be questioned collaterally.

A person who, although not the lawful clerk, yet exercises the functions of the office under color of right is an officer de facto.⁵ The acts of a clerk de facto are valid as to the public and third persons, and cannot be questioned collaterally.⁶

§ 6. Title to, and Possession of, Office

Title to the office of clerk of court should be determined by an appropriate proceeding, such as quo warranto, and prima facie title may confer the right to possession pending a contest.

Pending a contest for the office a prima facie title gives a right of possession.⁷ The question of title must be determined by some appropriate proceeding,⁸ the usual one being quo warranto.⁹ It has been held unnecessary for the incumbent of the office of clerk to contest before the election officials an alleged illegal election as a prerequisite to bringing injunction proceedings.¹⁰ The title to the office of the clerk of court cannot be collaterally attacked.¹¹

Clerks of court departments. Where a court is divided into departments each constituting a separate court, the clerk of each department is regarded as the clerk of that court.¹²

§ 7. Term of Office, Vacancy, and Holding Over

a. Term of office in general

b. Vacancy

c. Holding over

a. Term of Office in General

The term of office of a clerk of court is ordinarily fixed by constitutional or statutory provision, although it is subject to be cut down by changes in the law or by violation of the implied condition of good conduct in office.

Generally speaking, constitutional or statutory provisions control a clerk of court's term of office, as with respect to its commencement, duration, and other matters.¹³ If the time for the commencement of the term is prescribed by the constitution or statutes, the clerk may not be inducted into office until such time arrives.¹⁴ While it is held in some jurisdictions that, where the constitution fixes no limit to the duration of the term, the appointee holds ad libitum until the legislature prescribes a limit to his tenure,¹⁵ in others the general rule that, where the tenure of office is not prescribed by law, the term continues during the pleasure of the appointing power is applied.¹⁶ Statutes relating to the term of office of a clerk of court must not violate constitutional provisions;¹⁷ and where the term is fixed by constitutional provision the legislature has no power to alter it,¹⁸ although in the absence of a constitutional provision clearly protecting an incumbent clerk of court, his term may be shortened or ended at once by act of the legislature;¹⁹ but, even if the power to change the clerk's term of office belongs to the legislature, it cannot be effected by ambiguous, uncertain legislation.²⁰ Where the term of office for which the clerk may be appointed by the judge is fixed, his term may continue after that of the judge has expired.²¹

Expiration of term of office. Election or appointment of a clerk of court for a specified term does not vest in him an absolute tenure for such term, but his term is subject to be cut down by a change in the law and is subject to the condition that he conduct his office properly.²² A clerk's term of office may expire by death, resignation, or removal, as well as by the expiration of the statutory period for which he was elected.²³

One duly appointed clerk of a county court remains the de jure clerk thereof despite the enactment of an invalid statute purporting to abolish such court and an attempted appointment of another as clerk of the court which was to replace such county court under the terms of the invalid statute.²⁴

b. Vacancy

- (1) In general
- (2) Existence of vacancy
- (3) The commission
- (4) Appointment to fill future vacancy

(1) In General

In the absence of provisions of organic law regulating such matters, the legislature may prescribe the method of filling vacancies in the office of clerk of court and the term. Vacancies should be filled in the manner prescribed by law.

In the absence of a constitutional provision on the subject, the legislature may prescribe the method of filling a vacancy in the office of clerk of court,²⁵ and a vacancy in the office of clerk of court must be filled in the manner prescribed by law.²⁶ Sometimes it is required to be filled by election²⁷ and sometimes by appointment,²⁸ and no matter what method is prescribed the court or judge usually has power, both under statute and otherwise, to appoint a clerk pro tempore to perform the duties of the office until the vacancy can be regularly filled,²⁹ or he may exercise the duties of the office himself until an appointment to fill the vacancy is made.³⁰ A statute authorizing the court to make a temporary appointment until the office can be filled by election is within the power of the legislature.³¹ There is authority, both statutory and otherwise, for the appointment of a clerk pro tempore on the disqualification of the regular clerk;³² and where the same person is clerk of two courts a statute of this kind applies in the event of his disqualification in either or both capacities.³³ Where it appears that a certain person acted as clerk pro tempore, the presumption is that he was appointed under the circumstances and in the manner provided for by statute;³⁴ but where, although the case is one making such an appointment necessary to the validity of the proceedings in question, the record is silent, such silence of the record on that point indicates that one was not appointed rather than that one was.³⁵ The power of a clerk pro tempore necessarily ceases when the clerk resumes his duty; and without a reappointment the clerk pro tempore cannot act as such in the absence of the clerk.³⁶

Power of legislature to provide for election. Where under the state constitution a clerk must be elected by the voters of the county, if the constitution is silent as to elections to fill vacancies the legislature may provide by law for such election.³⁷

Appeal from appointment. The appointment by a court of a clerk to fill a vacancy is an executive and not a judicial act, so that neither writ of error nor appeal lies to review the order of appointment.³⁸

Term of one chosen to fill vacancy. In the absence of any constitutional provision on the subject, the legislature may prescribe the term of one appointed or elected to fill a vacancy in such office,³⁹ although where the constitution fixes the term of one elected to fill a vacancy, a statute purporting to vary such term is invalid.⁴⁰ Under some statutes, such person is entitled to serve a full term,⁴¹ in others until the next general election,⁴² or until the office is filled in another manner provided by statute,⁴³ while under others he is entitled to serve out the unexpired term of his predecessor.⁴⁴ Under a statute providing that on a vacancy in the office of clerk, the deputy shall serve until a new clerk shall be elected or appointed, the deputy's authority terminates on the election or appointment of another person to the office.⁴⁵

Right of pro tem appointee to hold office during good behavior. It is held that a person appointed clerk pro tempore cannot avail himself of a constitutional provision entitling a clerk to hold his office during good behavior;⁴⁶ but there is authority to the contrary where the appointee qualifies as a regular clerk.⁴⁷

(2) Existence of Vacancy

An appointment or election to fill a vacancy presupposes its existence, from whatever cause, and vacancies may arise inter alia, from the death, removal, or suspension of the incumbent of the office of clerk of court.

In order to justify a new election or appointment it is, of course, essential that a vacancy exist,⁴⁸ whether arising from the clerk's resignation or removal,⁴⁹ from his death,⁵⁰ from a failure to elect a successor to the incumbent,⁵¹ or from other cause.⁵²

Where the office of clerk of court is to be filled by general election, and where pending the next general election a new court is created, there occurs a vacancy in the office of clerk of such court which may properly be filled by appointment of an incumbent to hold until the next general election, and the term of the clerk to be chosen by election does not begin to run until the time of such general election.⁵³

Failure to give bond. It has been held that a clerk of court's failure to qualify by giving the required bond forfeits his right to office so as to create a vacancy permitting selection of another for the office,⁵⁴ although the office cannot be declared vacant, so as to justify appointment of another, for failure of the incumbent to give bond within the time stipulated by statute where such failure arises from direction of the judge.⁵⁵ There is also authority to the effect that, in the absence of a valid⁵⁶ statutory provision to that effect and covering the clerkship in question,⁵⁷ the failure of a clerk to qualify by giving the required bond does not per se operate to vacate the office.⁵⁸

On suspension of the clerk, there is ordinarily a vacancy which may be filled by appointment for the term of such suspension.⁵⁹

(3) The Commission

An appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of court is ordinarily complete without issuance of a commission.

Unless the issuance of a commission is made by law a necessary part of the appointment of a clerk to fill a vacancy, the appointment is complete when the choice is made.⁶⁰ When a commission or certificate is issued or given, no great formality therein is required.⁶¹

(4) Appointment to Fill Future Vacancy

A present appointment to fill a future vacancy has been upheld.

An appointment to fill a vacancy sure to occur in the office of clerk, made by the person or body empowered to fill such vacancy, is a valid appointment vesting the title to the office in the appointee, in the absence of any law declaring the contrary.⁶²

c. Holding Over

The right of an incumbent of the office of clerk of court to hold over depends on applicable provisions of law and is ordinarily accorded until qualification of his successor.

Under some statutes and constitutions the incumbent is entitled to hold over after the expiration of his term until his successor qualifies,⁶³ although it has been said that this would be true even in the absence of statute, if the constitution contains no express or implied prohibition.⁶⁴ A clerk merely appointed to fill a vacancy for an unexpired term is not an incumbent within the meaning of the rule.⁶⁵ In a few jurisdictions a clerk is not entitled to hold over, but his powers expire with his term of office.⁶⁶

Under constitutional provisions to the effect that, except in cases of impeachment or suspension, officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their offices until their successors shall be inducted into office, an acting clerk of court who has failed to qualify as de jure clerk and whose resignation has been accepted necessarily continues in office pending induction of his successor.⁶⁷

Under statutes providing that an incumbent shall hold office until his successor is elected and qualified, or is elected or appointed and qualified, where a newly elected clerk qualifies and then dies before commencement of his term, and where another is appointed in the place of decedent, the original incumbent is not entitled to hold over.⁶⁸

§ 8. Resignation, Suspension, and Removal

- a. Resignation
- b. Suspension
- c. Removal

a. Resignation

Clerks of courts may resign and the resignation need not be in any set form to become effective, although it is not complete until accepted.

A clerk of court has the same right to resign as other public officers have, and this right is not affected by the fact that charges are pending against him.⁶⁹ Where the judge of the court is empowered to fill the vacancy, the clerk's resignation is properly tendered to him;⁷⁰ and the resignation need not be in any set form, but is sufficient if it shows a clear intention to relinquish the office.⁷¹

A resignation is not complete until the tender thereof has been accepted with the knowledge and consent of the resigning incumbent;⁷² and, where there is not only no acceptance, but the incumbent continues to perform the duties and receive the fees of the office, there is no resignation.⁷³

An unconditional resignation, to take effect immediately, cannot be withdrawn, even with the consent of the power authorized to accept it; and it does not seem to be material that the resignation has not been accepted.⁷⁴ A contingent or a prospective resignation, however, can be withdrawn at any time before it is accepted.⁷⁵

b. Suspension

A clerk of court may be suspended for cause, such as misconduct in office.

In some jurisdictions provision is made for the suspension of a clerk of court pending the trial of charges against him.⁷⁶ He may not, however, be removed for this cause. The proper procedure is to appoint a clerk pro tem. to perform the duties of the clerk until the charges against him are heard and determined.⁷⁷ In some jurisdictions, the court has no authority to suspend its clerk except on conviction on an indictment for misconduct or misdemeanor in office,⁷⁸ and it has been held that a court clerk may not be suspended for misconduct committed in another office before commencement of his term as clerk, even though he is under indictment for such misconduct.⁷⁹

Provided the jurisdictional facts exist, it is not essential to the validity of an order suspending a clerk that the facts justifying it should be recited therein;⁸⁰ but in some jurisdictions the evidence must be placed on record in such a manner as to show that the action of the court is based on tangible premises.⁸¹

c. Removal

- (1) In general
- (2) Grounds
- (3) Procedure
- (4) Review

(1) In General

Clerks of courts are subject to removal within the limits, if any, fixed by constitutional and statutory provisions.

Where there is no provision, either constitutional or statutory, as to a clerk's tenure of office, or as to removing him from office, it is held that the authority to remove is a necessary attribute and within the discretion of the appointing power;⁸² but usually the power of removal is regulated by constitution or by statute, and, where such is the case, it can be exercised only within the prescribed limits,⁸³ as where the power of removal is limited to removal for cause,⁸⁴ on notice,⁸⁵ and after a trial

It has been held that a provision of a city charter to the effect that the appointing authority shall have power of removal does not apply to a clerk of a police court because he is not a city officer.⁸⁷

A board for trying contested elections has no authority to declare the office of clerk of the courts vacant.⁸⁸

Removal by legislature. The legislature cannot, by statute, deprive a clerk of his office, where the office itself continues to exist.⁸⁹ However, a constitutional provision relating to the time and place of election and to the term of office of clerks of courts is not infringed by a statute abolishing a court, but retaining the clerk in office for the term for which he was elected and assigning to him, for that period and no longer, the right to execute his old duties in the new tribunal to which the jurisdiction of the abolished court has been transferred.⁹⁰ In some jurisdictions the senate may remove a clerk from office by impeachment.⁹¹

Civil service. Clerks of courts may⁹² or may not⁹³ come within the protection of particular civil service regulations as respects the right of removal.

Superannuation. A clerk of court has been held a public officer and not an employee within the meaning of statutes providing for compulsory retirement of employees for old age.⁹⁴

(2) Grounds

The grounds for removal specified in controlling statutory or constitutional provisions are exclusive. Generally speaking a clerk of court is removable for misconduct affecting his office.

Where express provision is made for the removal of clerks, the power of removal can be exercised for no causes other than those specified.⁹⁵ It seems that, where the statute authorizes removal for breach of good behavior, the clerk may be removed for misbehavior which has no connection with his official duties,⁹⁶ provided the facts are such as to induce a conviction that it would be unsafe for the public if the clerk should continue to discharge his duties;⁹⁷ but, where the grounds of removal are limited to misconduct in office, the misconduct must be of a kind affecting the performance of his official duties,⁹⁸ such as the making of false entries⁹⁹ or certificates,¹ making or permitting alterations or erasures in papers in his custody,² the exaction of illegal fees,³ misdating his file mark,⁴ the misappropriation of funds,⁵ or a willful neglect or refusal to perform duties imposed on him by law.⁶ Under statutes authorizing removal of clerks for "cause," the ground of removal must be something causing prejudice to public rights or seriously interfering with the discipline of the office or department;⁷ where the ground of removal is specified as "sufficient cause," the statute contemplates removal for a cause relating to and affecting the administration of the office of clerk of the court from which it is sought to remove defendant and not one relating to his official duties in another court;⁸ and, where the ground is "moral turpitude," a clerk of court may be removed for retaining for his individual benefit interest on funds intrusted to his official custody.⁹

Under a constitutional provision for forfeiture of office where an officer with power of appointment of another shall appoint one related to him by "affinity," a clerk of court's wife is so far his "affinity" as to warrant forfeiture of his office where he appoints her a deputy clerk.¹⁰

Necessity for corrupt motive. If the act charged against a clerk is one which per se amounts to a breach of good behavior, he will be removed without regard to the motive that actuated him;¹¹ but, if the act is of a nature which, according to circumstances, may or may not constitute misconduct, the clerk will not be removed, where he appears to have acted in good faith and without any improper motive.¹²

(3) Procedure

The procedure must comply with applicable statutory or constitutional requirements, which usually require charges and an opportunity to be heard.

Where the procedure for the removal of a clerk is pointed out by statute, it must be followed.¹³ Usually the proceeding is required to be prosecuted in the name of the state,¹⁴ on due notice to defendant,¹⁵ and with an opportunity to be heard.¹⁶

The general rules of pleading control,¹⁷ and the acts charged must be specifically alleged¹⁸ in writing,¹⁹ supported by affidavit,²⁰ and proved as charged.²¹ New charges cannot be added by amendment;²² nor will a supplemental information be allowed, where it makes a charge not covered by an agreement of the parties relative to the taking of proof.²³

A clerk prosecuted for breach of good behavior will be required to produce any books and papers belonging to his office which may be necessary as evidence.²⁴

Other holdings, under various statutes, are that the attorney general may institute proceedings without first obtaining leave of court;²⁵ that the petition must state the name of the accuser;²⁶ that, where the charges are denied by a sufficient answer, a time must be set for the hearing;²⁷ that default need not be proved by conviction on indictment where the clerk's default is apparent from his admission in court;²⁸ and that, where in a proceeding to remove a clerk the jury has found the facts adversely to defendant, the judge has no discretion in determining whether the facts as found by the jury constitute sufficient cause for removing the clerk,²⁹ although, where the jury find that sufficient cause for removal exists, it is discretionary with the judge whether such finding shall be enforced or suspended.³⁰ Evidence of the conduct of defendant as clerk of a city court has been held irrelevant and immaterial in a proceeding to remove him as clerk of a superior court.³¹ Bench dockets kept by defendant clerk have been held admissible.³² The general rules control as respects the sufficiency of the evidence.³³ Where the proceeding is summary in its nature, the judgment must contain all the facts necessary to show jurisdiction in the court.³⁴ The judges must act jointly,³⁵ and a majority must concur, as to the cause for which the clerk is to be removed, as well as in the propriety of a sentence of removal.³⁶

A clerk may not be convicted on counts of a petition charging him with acts not forming ground for removal in the particular proceeding involved.³⁷

A finding that defendant clerk is guilty of any one of several charges is sufficient to authorize his removal, although other counts of the petition may be unsustained by the evidence.³⁸

Where the power of removal is incident to the power of appointment, it may be exercised either by notice to the officer or by the mere appointment of a successor,³⁹ although under some provisions of law a clerk or register may be removed by the appointive power only for cause to be entered on the minutes.⁴⁰

(4) Review

The right of a clerk of court to review of an order for his removal depends on the statutory provisions in the particular jurisdiction.

A judgment removing a clerk from office may usually be reviewed on writ of error,⁴¹ although an appeal in the nature of a writ of error does not lie under some statutes.⁴² It has been held that an order denying a petition to remove a clerk is not appealable;⁴³ and that, where a clerk is removed from office by the senate on impeachment, the courts of law will not review the proceedings.⁴⁴ Where the case comes up on review the usual rules of appellate practice will apply.⁴⁵

II. COMPENSATION AND FEES

§ 9. In General

The compensation of a clerk of court, by way of salary or fee, is ordinarily such as may be expressly stipulated by statute, and, in the absence of statutory provision, the clerk may be obligated to perform the duties of his office, or part of them, without compensation.

The compensation of clerks of courts is ordinarily regulated by statutory or constitutional provision,⁴⁶ the legislature may fix their compensation, by way of salary or fees, within constitutional limitations,⁴⁷ and a clerk is entitled to the compensation provided by law,⁴⁸ but a clerk of a court is entitled to such compensation only as is specifically provided for by statute,⁴⁹ and, where the statute so provides, such as is first approved by the proper officials.⁵⁰ He takes his office cum onere and must perform gratuitously those official duties for which no compensation is provided by law,⁵¹ even perior court, refusal to allow defendant to make statement was harmless to him, where he voluntarily took witness stand and gave testimony under oath.—Wallace v. State, 129 S.E. 299, 34 Ga.App. 281, conforming to answers to certified questions 128 S.E. 759, 160 Ga. 570.

As respects city's right to deduct from salary of clerk of superior court for public welfare, obligation to pay salary rested on city by virtue of statute, and not by virtue of express or implied contract.—Campbell v. City of Boston, Mass., 195 N.E. 802.

Pro rata fee

Under Rev.St. § 2687, Comp.St.1916 § 5394, and Act June 29, 1906, a clerk of a court is not entitled to the full maximum sum allowed for fees collected in naturalization proceedings in any one fiscal year, received during six months of such year, but is only entitled to retain his pro rata share of such maximum sum for the period during which such fees were collected.—Darling v. United States, 51 Ct.Cl. 100.

Validity of appointment

"General clerk of Supreme Court" for Kings County appointed under L.1878 c 21, by justices of supreme court residing in that county, is entitled to salary of such position as against one appointed by county clerk with same title.—Devoy v. Undertaking to perform services without fees

"The county court clerk under-

though the constitution of the state provides that "no man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation,"⁵² and, if he refuses, appropriate proceeding will lie to compel him to perform the services.⁵³ While the court cannot authorize the clerk to charge fees if there is no statute authorizing it,⁵⁴ yet a court can require service from a clerk which he is bound to perform, although there is no statutory fee for the service,⁵⁵ and, on the performance of such service, the clerk is entitled to compensation, although he is unable to point to the clause of a statute authorizing compensation for such services.⁵⁶ Sometimes provision is made by statute for compensation for services "not otherwise provided for,"⁵⁷ and various provisions for special and extra compensation are to be met with, as is shown in § 23; but, in the absence of any such provision, a clerk is not entitled to any greater compensation than that provided by the statute,⁵⁸ and it is against public policy to allow a clerk to contract with parties for greater fees than those provided by law,⁵⁹ although a party may be bound by an implied contract to pay clerk's fees.⁶⁰ Where a gross sum is provided as the compensation of a clerk for his services in a certain proceeding, he is not entitled to charge other fees for specific services involved in such proceedings.⁶¹ A statute making the clerk's fees in each proceeding payable in a lump sum and chargeable in that way, instead of in itemized detail, as formerly, does not change existing law making the fees payable to the county and not to the clerk individually.⁶²

It has been held, under particular statutes, that the clerk in office at the time a judgment is rendered is entitled to all the fees provided in respect thereof and that, where there is a change of clerks, there should be no division of fees as between the old and new clerks.⁶³

Under some statutes the fixing of compensation for a clerk of court may rest in the discretion of designated officials, subject to control by the courts for abuse of discretion,⁶⁴ or may be based on the population of the county wherein the court lies.⁶⁵

Where no compensation provided except fees. Where the statute makes no provision for the compensation of a clerk except the fees he is to receive, he can receive no other pay for official services except that which may be classed as "fees."⁶⁶

§ 10. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Statutes regulating compensation of clerks of court should be strictly but reasonably construed in the light of applicable constitutional provisions, and will ordinarily be denied a retroactive effect.

Statutes authorizing the clerk to collect fees for his services are strictly construed and will not be extended beyond their letter;⁶⁷ and more especially is this true in the case of special statutory enactments.⁶⁸ A general provision covering services not specially provided for will not embrace services for the state or a county, unless they are expressly named in the statute or necessarily implied from the language thereof;⁶⁹ nor will statutes allowing the clerk certain fees be construed retroactively, unless such is the clear intention of the legislatakes to perform certain duties for which no fees are specifically provided by statutes when he assumes the duties of the office, accepting for all such services the compensations as allowed by law for other services specifically mentioned in the statutes."—Logan County v. Russell, supra.

ture;⁷⁰ but, although statutes regulating the clerk's fees are to be strictly construed, they must also receive a reasonable construction;⁷¹ in case of ambiguity the construction placed on the statutes by the legislative and executive departments of the state will be given weight;⁷² and, where a word is used in its ordinary and generally accepted sense in some parts of the statute, it will not be deemed to have been used in a narrow and restricted sense in other parts of the same statute.⁷³ The well settled rule of statutory construction, which confines the meaning of additional and general descriptive words to the class to which the preceding specific words belong, is especially applicable in the construction of statutes under which clerks claim fees.⁷⁴ Where words have been erroneously employed in a statute providing for the clerk's fees and compensation, and the context affords the means of correction, the proper words will be deemed to be substituted.⁷⁵ Particular statutes in the various states relating to the compensation and fees of clerks of courts have been held to be amended⁷⁶ or to be repealed,⁷⁷ or not to be repealed,⁷⁸ or to be revived,⁷⁹ by subsequent statutes, or to be valid⁸⁰ or invalid.⁸¹ Also, certain statutes, rather than others, have been held to govern the particular case,⁸² and some statutes have been held inapplicable to a clerk of the supreme court,⁸³ while others are deemed applicable to the clerks of courts of every county in the state.⁸⁴

On the admission of a territory to statehood, the federal fee bill which was in force in the territory is not brought over and put in force by the constitution of the new state, where it is inconsistent therewith and repugnant thereto and is locally inapplicable.⁸⁵

Time of taking effect. The time when statutes altering existing provisions for compensating clerks of court take effect depends on the terms of the statute or the constitution in the particular jurisdiction.⁸⁶

§ 11. Fees for Particular Services

The right of a clerk of court to fees for sundry particular services is ordinarily dependent on statutory authorization.

Under statute in many jurisdictions, clerks of court are entitled to particular fees for particular services,⁸⁷ such as services performed in connection with the jury,⁸⁸ although in the absence of statutory provision therefor fees for particular services will be denied,⁸⁹ as in the case of denial of fees for particular services rendered in connection with a jury;⁹⁰ and where the clerk is entitled to some compensation, the amount thereof is limited to that provided by statute.⁹¹

§ 12. — Services Performed by Party or Attorney

It has been both affirmed and denied that a clerk of court may recover fees for services imposed on him by law but in fact performed by a party or attorney.

As a general rule, a party has no right to perform services which the law imposes on the clerk and thus deprive the latter of his lawful compensation. Where such services are performed by a party or his attorney the clerk is nevertheless entitled to compensation as if he had performed them himself;⁹² but the contrary has been held in some jurisdictions;⁹³ and when a statute provides that a party litigant shall cause a certain thing to be done, it impliedly repeals a statute authorizing a court to fix the fee of the clerk for the same service and deprives the clerk of his right to the fee.⁹⁴

§ 13. — Voluntary Services

Ordinarily, a clerk may not recover for performance of services which are purely voluntary.

For services which he is not required by law to perform, the clerk is not entitled to compensation;⁹⁵ and it is sometimes expressly so provided by statute as to certain matters.⁹⁶

§ 14. — Ex Officio Services

The right of a clerk of court to compensation for ex officio services must ordinarily rest on statutory provision therefor.

In some jurisdictions the clerk is allowed special compensation for ex officio services,⁹⁷ but particular statutes in these jurisdictions have been construed not to confer the right to ex officio fees,⁹⁸ and local statutes have been held to be impliedly repealed by general statutes establishing a general system throughout the state as to ex officio fees.⁹⁹ In other jurisdictions a clerk is denied compensation for ex officio services,¹ and clerks have been held within a general statutory provision that no compensation can be allowed for any ex officio services rendered by any officer.² In the event that it is not provided otherwise by statute, where the clerk fills but one office, he is entitled to but one salary, although he is, by statute, ex officio discharging the duties of another officer, and thus performing dual functions;³ but where a statute requires that a clerk of one court shall be compensated for services performed for another court, the latter court has authority to make him reasonable allowances therefor.⁴

Another official acting as ex officio clerk of court has been held entitled to compensation for such ex officio services.⁵

§ 15. — Copies, Duplicates, and Exemplifications

Clerks of court are ordinarily entitled to statutory compensation for making copies, duplicates, and exemplifications, although compensation in some instances may be based on a quantum meruit or denied.

In most jurisdictions, by statute or rule of court, the clerk is entitled to some fee or compensation for furnishing copies of records and papers,⁶ except under some circumstances, or as to copies of some records and papers.⁷ Where the compensation is fixed by statute, it may not be varied by agreement,⁸ although where no express provision of law covers the service, compensation has been allowed on the basis of a quantum meruit.⁹

The word "copy" has been construed to mean certified copy,¹⁰ although if the clerk furnishes the original instead of a copy, he may nevertheless

§ 16. — Miscellaneous Services

A clerk of court's right to fees for miscellaneous services, such as filing and recording papers, trial and docket matters, taking affidavits and acknowledgments, and the like, depends largely on local statutory provisions.

Questions regarding the specific fees to which a clerk is entitled depend so entirely on the various statutory provisions in the different jurisdictions that a detailed discussion of the decisions would serve no useful purpose here. Consequently, little more is attempted than to present a collection of the cases which deal with the right to, and amount of, compensation of the clerk for the performance of particular services, such as the issuing of writs, process, and notices;¹³ the filing of papers;¹⁴ the entering of judgments, decrees, or orders;¹⁵ the

tinuance of causes;⁴⁰ and in the settlement of decedents' estates.⁴¹

§ 17. Separate Fees

Although a clerk of court is not entitled to separate fees for each service where a gross fee is prescribed for the entire proceeding, nor where fees designated for particular services are sufficient to compensate him for discharge of all the duties of his office, in the absence of a gross fee regulation, he may be entitled to separate fees for each separate step in the case.

When compensation to clerks of courts is made by fees, they are not paid for each and every service performed; but for certain designated services prescribed fees are allowed, the aggregate of which is generally deemed sufficient for the discharge of all the duties of the office.⁴² Separating a single order or proceeding into separate parts will not justify the clerk in increasing the charge;⁴³ but, for each separate step or proceeding in a case in connection with which the clerk performs any services and for which services compensation is provided by law, he is entitled to charge a separate fee,⁴⁴ except where a gross fee for the entire action or proceeding is provided for by statute; and, where duplicate copies of papers must be made out, the clerk may charge for the duplicates,⁴⁵ except as to certain matters in some jurisdictions.⁴⁶

§ 18. — Services Rendered Joint Parties or in Consolidated Cases

A clerk of court is ordinarily entitled to only one fee for services rendered for joint parties or in consolidated causes, although in the case of a severance he may become entitled to separate fees.

For services rendered for joint parties or in consolidated causes, the clerk is entitled ordinarily to but one fee,⁴⁷ but, where his services are required to be performed separately for each party, or in each cause, he is entitled to separate fees,⁴⁸ as where there is a severance following a joint indictment.⁴⁹ In determining whether the clerk is entitled to a single or to several fees for his services in a case, usage, custom, or uniform practice cannot be invoked in the face of positive law.⁵⁰

§ 19. Discriminatory Fees

A clerk of court must charge uniform fees and may not discriminate in the rates charged different parties for the same service.

The clerk cannot discriminate between litigants and charge fees against one at a higher rate than he would be entitled to charge another.⁵¹ So, if the statute designates the amount of the fee to be charged, the clerk cannot perform the designated services for less than the maximum prescribed by the statute,⁵² especially where his compensation is a fixed salary and he is required to account to the treasurer for all fees earned. In such case, if he charges less than the maximum for his services, he must nevertheless account in full as required by law.⁵³

§ 20. Commissions on Funds Handled

The right of a clerk of court to commissions on funds handled by him ordinarily depends on specific statutory provisions. In the federal courts a commission of one per cent is allowed on funds received, kept and paid out.

If there is a statute authorizing it,⁵⁴ the clerk is entitled to a commission on funds handled;⁵⁵ and the fact that the right to such a commission is given by statute does not deprive the clerk of fees to which he would have been entitled if the funds in question had been kept and disbursed by another officer.⁵⁶

In the federal courts, under statute, a clerk is entitled to a commission on money received, kept, and paid out under court order,⁵⁷ although his commissions attach only when he has actually received, kept and paid out the fund, and where the clerk has collected his commission in advance of paying out the money he may not collect again when he does pay it out.⁵⁸ If the fund is not subject to the clerk's check, and he is in no way responsible for it, the commission will be disallowed.⁵⁹ A statute conferring the right to a commission on "moneys" does not entitle the clerk to a commission on securities⁶⁰ or certificates of deposit,⁶¹ nor, it has been held, on money deposited as a cash substitute for a bond,⁶² although a clerk has been held entitled to commissions on certificates of deposit where in substance and in fact the deposit itself was made on his behalf and the money itself was given to him by paying it into the bank for his account.⁶³ Where the statute allows the commission "for receiving, keeping and paying out money, in pursuance of any statute or order of court, including cash bail or bonds or securities authorized by law to be deposited in lieu of other security," to entitle the clerk to his commission there must be a receiving, a keeping, and a paying out in pursuance of statute or order of court.⁶⁴ Although a commission may, under such statute, be had with reference to securities authorized by law,⁶⁵ there can be no commission allowed where certificates of deposit are given and made payable to the clerk on a condition which is never fulfilled.⁶⁶

§ 21. Per Diem Compensation

Under statute clerks of court may be entitled to a per diem compensation, although where they have previously received the maximum allowed by law they cannot get an additional allowance per diem.

In some, but not in all,⁶⁷ jurisdictions the clerk is entitled to a per diem compensation for attendance on the court while in session, whether any business is transacted or not.⁶⁸ Under the federal

Commissions on fines and fees

Money paid to the clerk of a district court in discharge of a fine imposed by the court is money received, kept, and paid out pursuant to an order of the court, on which the clerk, under Rev.St. § 828, Comp.St. § 1383, is entitled to a commission of one per cent, but he is not entitled to collect a commission on his own fees or on those of the district attorney or marshal which may be paid to him.—U. statute, providing that, when the circuit and district courts sit at the same time, no greater per diem compensation shall be made to the clerk than is made for attendance on one court, the clerk may charge his per diem compensation against either court as he may elect;⁶⁹ and where the two courts, or different divisions of the same court, are held in different places at the same time, the clerk is entitled to charge per diem compensation for both his personal attendance on one court and his attendance by deputy on the other court.⁷⁰

Where applicable statutes forbid a clerk to receive any compensation in addition to his salary, a salaried clerk of court is not entitled to a per diem,⁷¹ and after receiving the maximum compensation allowed by law, a clerk may not also collect per diem fees.⁷²

§ 22. Office Expenses, Supplies, Clerk Hire, Etc.

The right of a clerk of court to an allowance for office supplies and other expenses ordinarily depends on statutory authorization and due compliance with regulatory requirements.

The clerk is entitled to an allowance for office expenses, supplies, etc.,⁷³ if authorized by statute,⁷⁴ and if there has been due compliance with the requirements of governing statutes⁷⁵ or regulations.⁷⁶ Where particular services have in fact been performed by salaried deputies, the clerk is not entitled to an allowance of personal compensation therefor from the county.⁷⁷

Under the Illinois constitution, a clerk of court is not entitled to retain more funds for clerk hire and office expenses than the amount allowed him by the county board, although he has in fact expended more,⁷⁸ nor, where he has expended less for that purpose than the amount allowed, is he entitled to retain the excess.⁷⁹

§ 23. Extra or Additional Compensation

Ordinarily, a clerk of court is not entitled to extra compensation for extra services unless there has been due provision of law therefor, although for the performance of services not incidental to his office he may be allowed compensation without express statutory authorization.

Generally speaking, a clerk of court may not recover extra compensation for extra services where there is no statutory or constitutional authorization therefor.⁸⁰ The general rule, in the absence of legislation, is that, if the statute increases the duties of the clerk by the addition of other duties germane to his office, he must perform them without extra compensation;⁸¹ but, if he is required to render services in an independent employment, not incidental to his official duties, he may recover for such services.⁸² A clerk who is paid a fixed salary for all services required by law cannot recover additional compensation for extra services.⁸³ Likewise, where a clerk has been paid for his services the maximum amount allowed by law, he is not entitled to receive additional compensation for the performance of duties in connection with his office.⁸⁴ If additional compensation is paid without authority of law, it may be recovered back by action;⁸⁵ but in some jurisdictions extra allowances may be made to the clerk for extra services, especially if they are extraordinary and unusually onerous, and cannot be considered official business of the clerk.⁸⁶ Thus, "indispensable public necessity" is recognized in some jurisdictions as a ground for allowing the clerk additional compensation.⁸⁷ Furthermore, the principle under which a clerk is denied additional compensation for extra services is inapplicable where the duties imposed and the services rendered are for the federal government, and not for the state government under which he holds office.⁸⁸

In some jurisdictions clerks of court are paid a stipulated salary, the amount of which is fixed by or under statutory provisions.

Under statutes in some jurisdictions clerks of court receive their compensation in the form of a salary,⁸⁹ which is usually payable out of the official fees received by them.⁹⁰ Where this is the case the clerk cannot receive more than the amount designated,⁹¹ as computed in accordance with the period of service,⁹² and if a deficiency occurs it cannot be made up out of other funds,⁹³ except where a minimum salary is fixed by law, and the fees fall below that amount.⁹⁴ While, if in any one year of his term the aggregate of the fees of the clerk is insufficient to pay his salary for that year, he is entitled to have an excess standing to his credit in a preceding year of his term applied to meet the deficit,⁹⁵ yet, in the case of a clerk serving two or more terms, he cannot appropriate a surplus accruing in one term to a deficit occurring in another term.⁹⁶

Fixing of salary by municipal corporation. Where a city charter fixes the salary of the clerk of the police court, an ordinance attempting to fix such salary is invalid.⁹⁷ In a jurisdiction where a clerk of a particular court is considered neither a city nor a local officer, his salary cannot be fixed and determined by city officials under a statute giving them that power as to local officers,⁹⁸ or under a city charter conferring the power as to officers whose compensation is paid out of the city treasury.⁹⁹

§ 25. Accounting for Fees

- a. In general
- b. Naturalization fees

a. In General

A clerk of court must account for fees to which he is not individually entitled, as where the fees collected exceed his authorized compensation or were illegally exacted under color of office.

In many jurisdictions in which a salary compensation has been substituted for fees, the clerk is required to account to the public treasurer for any excess of fees above the compensation and allowances authorized by law to be retained by him,¹ if earned in his official capacity,² whether collected before or after his term of office expires,³ or whether collected by him at all, for he extends credit at his peril;⁴ but a clerk need not account for uncollected fees not falling within the purview of the statute involved,⁵ and he may hold back all fees earned by his office until the salary allowed him by law has been paid.⁶ In other jurisdictions, or as to clerks of other courts in the same jurisdictions, the clerk's salary is the full compensation to which he is entitled for all services rendered, and he must pay into the treasury all fees and moneys⁷ earned by him in his official capacity,⁸ although other statutes have been construed as not requiring a clerk to account for fees.⁹ Under some statutes it has been held that the clerk must account for all fees received in tax suits brought by cities, towns, and independent school districts,¹⁰ or that all "fees" collected by the clerk are the property of the county and must be paid into the treasury,¹¹ even though the county pays them back to the clerk as salary;¹² but the clerk is not prohibited from retaining the per diem compensation allowed him for court attendance.¹³ On an accounting the clerk is not entitled to credits for hire of assistants where he failed to follow statutory requirements in respect of procuring prior authorization for their employment.¹⁴

Statutes exempting fees from a maximum fee bill will not be extended by implication to include fees not specified.¹⁵

Illegal fees. It has been held that the public authorities may recover illegal fees collected by a clerk of court under color of office, although the right of recovery has been denied in respect of illegal fees collected without color of office.¹⁶ It has also been held that a clerk cannot be compelled to account to the state or county for fees illegally exacted by him, because he is liable for their repayment.¹⁷

Clerks of federal courts must account for fees and emoluments of office in accordance with statutory requirements,¹⁸ and the clerk's return thereof must be in writing and verified.¹⁹ It has been held that there is no obligation on the part of a clerk to account for fees until he has collected them.²⁰ The government is not entitled to interest on fees and emoluments collected by the clerk and deposited in a bank.²¹ The treasury department lacks authority to order canceled checks of the clerk, drawn against fees and emoluments deposited by him in a bank, to be retained by the bank.²²

Change of incumbents. After a clerk has received the amount allowed by law for his compensation, he has no further interest in the fees, and his successor is entitled to collect the uncollected fees;²³ and in case his successor receives certain fees and turns them over to him, he must account for them.²⁴ Under the various salary laws, the clerk's successor in office must account for fees received by him for work begun but not completed by his predecessor in office; but the clerk is not required to account for fees collected by him for services rendered by his predecessor before the act requiring such accounting went into effect, even though the act was in force when such fees were collected.²⁵ A clerk of a court who collects his fees, pays the salaries and expenses of his office, and at the end of the year pays the balance into the treasury is not bound by the terms of the statute providing that an outgoing officer shall at once deliver to his successor in office all fees due to such officer in his official capacity.²⁶

A compromise between a clerk of court and the county board respecting fees for which he failed to account in violation of his official duty is void.²⁷

Procedure in suits to recover fees. The usual rules governing matters of procedure apply to suits by the public authorities to recover fees from clerks of court, as with respect to the jurisdiction of the court,²⁸ and matters of pleading²⁹ and evidence,³⁰ and amount of recovery.³¹

Retention of property. It has been held that a clerk of court may retain in his possession property in respect of which he has rendered services until his compensation is paid.³²

b. Naturalization Fees

Clerks of state courts are in most, but not all, jurisdictions required to account to local authorities for the portion of naturalization fees which do not have to be paid to the federal government. Clerks of federal courts may retain a portion of the fees collected.

In most jurisdictions in which the clerk has been placed on a salary and required to account to the public treasury for fees received by him, it is held that fees for services in naturalization proceedings must be accounted for, because they are regarded as having been received in his official capacity.³³ Generally speaking, congressional legislation is exclusive of state legislation with regard to the amount of the fees to be charged in naturalization proceedings and the disposition of such fees as between the clerk of court and the bureau of naturalization.³⁴ In some jurisdictions it is held that the act of congress authorizing clerks to retain one half of the fees collected refers merely to the adjustment between the clerk and the bureau of immigration and does not affect his duty to account to the state or county treasurer for the balance,³⁵ and that half the fees should be paid to the federal government and the other half to the

Relief in equity

(1) Court of equity has jurisdiction of suit by county to recover from circuit clerk on account of fraudulent and illegal claims for services rendered, which had been allowed by the county court and for which warrants had been issued, some of which were paid.—Johnson County v. Bost, 213 S.W. 388, 139 Ark. 35.

(2) Amount due by clerk of court above statutory compensation cannot be recovered in equity, there being adequate law remedy.—Orange County v. Robinson, 149 So. 19, 110 Fla. 318.

(3) Suit by county against former clerk of court to recover excess fees not accounted for by clerk and to impress trust on property allegedly purchased with such fees could not be maintained in equity, since amount of claim could only be established by law action and property allegedly held in trust could be reached by creditor's bill.—Hillsborough County v. Under L.1885 c 502, and L.1891 c 149, naturalization fees received by clerk of Erie county belong to county and not to clerk individually, since Act Congr.June 29, 1906, authorizing clerks of state courts to retain portion of naturalization fees, leaves ownership and disposition of fees so retained to control of state law.—Price v. Erie County, supra.

local government in accordance with applicable statutory requirements.³⁶ In other jurisdictions it has been held that the clerk is entitled under the act of congress to retain such fees,³⁷ and that a state statute requiring the clerk to account therefor is invalid and inoperative as being in conflict with the federal statute,³⁸ although there is also authority to the effect that the state may abolish the fee system and require all fees to be paid into the treasury.³⁹

The clerks of the federal courts were formerly not required to account for fees received in naturalization proceedings;⁴⁰ but according to the express provisions of the act of June 29, 1906, they are entitled to retain one half of such fees in any fiscal year up to the sum of three thousand dollars, and required to account for and to pay over the excess to the bureau of immigration; and, by virtue of other statutory provisions, where the clerk serves only part of the year, he is entitled to retain only a proportionate part of the maximum amount allowed by statute.⁴¹ The courts have upheld the validity of a regulation requiring clerks to remit quarterly on a pro rata basis.⁴²

§ 26. Recovery Back of Fees Accounted for

A clerk may not recover fees paid the state or county under mistake of law nor illegal or excessive fees collected by him and paid over.

If the clerk exacts illegal and excessive fees and pays them over to the state or county, he cannot recover them back;⁴³ nor may fees voluntarily paid to the county under a mistake of law be recovered back. The clerk's settlement with the county is conclusive on both him and the county, unless impeachable for fraud, collusion, or mistake.⁴⁴

§ 27. Who Liable

- a. Public authorities
- b. Private persons

a. Public Authorities

Generally speaking, public authorities may be held liable for the fees of a clerk of court where there is statutory authorization but not otherwise. Public officials are not ordinarily personally liable.

Under statute a state, county, or city may be held liable for the fees of a clerk of court.⁴⁵ Although the county has been held liable for certain services and expenditures of a clerk, even in the absence of a statute authorizing such compensation,⁴⁶ as a general rule the public is liable for the compensation of a clerk of court only where there is specific authority to the officer to make a charge for the service rendered, and a positive statutory provision making the public liable therefor.⁴⁷ If the clerk is unable to collect from the parties, he must himself sustain the loss and cannot hold the county liable.⁴⁸ The fact that certain services were performed in pursuance of a court order will not render the county liable if the court had no power to contract obligations for it,⁴⁹ nor will the allowance of an unlawful claim by the person or body authorized to contract obligations for the county bind the county.⁵⁰ A city has no right to deprive a clerk of court of his costs for services rendered in a cause, by causing a fieri facias issued on a judgment in its favor to be set aside.⁵¹

A third party appearing and defending a suit in admiralty in behalf of an absent party thereto may be made personally liable for fees of the clerk covering services rendered in the cause at his request.⁵³ Under a statute providing for collection of fees by a clerk for services rendered "except when on behalf of the United States," the quoted phrase has been held inapplicable to suits in which the United States is a party litigant, so that the United States may be held liable for the clerk's fee in such a case.⁵⁴

A public official, such as a district attorney, is not liable to the clerk of court for the latter's fees in a criminal case.⁵⁵

b. Private Persons

Generally speaking, the party for whom a clerk of court renders services in connection with a suit may be held responsible for his fees.

Usually the party for whom services are rendered or the assignee of his interest⁵⁶ is answerable to the clerk for his fees,⁵⁷ and where the clerk cannot make his fees out of the unsuccessful party he may generally hold the successful party liable for them,⁵⁸ although he may not in such case hold the sureties on the prosecution bond of the successful party,⁵⁹ and it has been held that on affirmance the clerk or prothonotary cannot resort to the writ of error recognizance for his fees.⁶⁰ Where an action to recover land is dismissed by plaintiff, the clerk has no lien on the land for services rendered by him for the benefit of plaintiff.⁶¹

§ 28. To Whom Payable

The fees are ordinarily payable to the clerk of court incumbent at the time when they were earned.

The clerk, to whom fees are taxed in any case, is the only person entitled by law to receive them from the party chargeable, or from the sheriff who has collected them on fee bill or execution.⁶² Although the contrary has been held in some cases,⁶³ the general rule is that the incumbent clerk has no right to fees earned by, or taxed to, his predecessor; they belong either to the latter or to the county.⁶⁴ However, within the meaning of some fee statutes, a fee is earned by the incumbent and is payable to him where the final steps were taken during his term, although some steps were taken during the term of his predecessor.⁶⁵

§ 29. Time for Payment

- a. In general
- b. Prepayment

a. In General

The practice varies in respect of whether a clerk of court may collect his costs as they accrue or must abide the event.

As to when the fees of a clerk are payable is a question depending on the statutes and the practice of the particular court. With regard to some services the clerk may collect his costs as they accrue irrespective of the final result,⁶⁶ while as to

Curry, 27 Ark. 440.

A prothonotary has a right to receive his fees eventually, plaintiff becoming liable therefor when a non others his costs must abide the event,⁶⁷ and an established usage amongst clerks of court prematurely to demand their fees is no justification.⁶⁸

In Louisiana clerks have the right every six months after the institution of the suit to demand their costs from plaintiff.⁶⁹

b. Prepayment

Whether or not a clerk of court is entitled to prepayment of his fees depends upon the local practice and the nature of the services.

Both in cases where there is express or implied statutory authority or requirement, and in cases where there is an absence of statutory prohibition, a clerk of court is entitled to demand prepayment of his fees before performing certain services;⁷⁰ but as to certain services in some jurisdictions, in the absence of an express provision therefor, the right to prepayment has been denied.⁷¹ Even where the clerk is deemed to have no right to refuse arbitrarily to perform the desired services until his fees have been paid, the court will exercise discretion, and where necessary to the protection of the clerk will order that the fees be paid in advance;⁷² but the mere fact that the clerk does not exercise the statutory right to demand his fees in advance does not bar him from recovering pay for his services from the party for whose benefit they were rendered,⁷³ nor does it render void the act done by him,⁷⁴ nor affect the rights of the parties thereunder.⁷⁵ The clerk may waive his right to demand prepayment of his fees,⁷⁶ and he cannot insist that before performing some service required of him he shall first be paid his fees for some previous service for which he has given credit.⁷⁷

Prepayment and return. It is sometimes provided by rule of court that trial fees paid to the clerk shall not be returned to plaintiff after issue joined or trial had.⁷⁸

§ 30. Proceedings to Recover Compensation

- a. Against the public
- b. Against parties
- c. Against other officials
- d. Action by clerk de facto

a. Against the Public

- (1) In general
- (2) Defenses

(1) In General

A clerk of court is ordinarily the proper party to bring suit for his fees, and proceedings to collect compensation are generally governed by the usual rules as interpreted in the light of controlling statutory provisions. Under some practice the clerk may deduct his salary and expenses from fees collected.

Ordinarily, the clerk himself is the proper party to bring suit for his fees.⁷⁹ In order to recover fees or salary due him for public services the clerk must file a sufficient petition or complaint⁸⁰ in the proper court,⁸¹ and usually it is a statutory condition precedent to suit that there be a presentation of a sufficiently specific claim to, and action thereon by, a judge, county board, or other designated official or body.⁸² Pending an investigation of the clerk's bill, no action will lie to enforce it,⁸³ and if the account is duly approved as required by law, plaintiff need not prove each particular item,⁸⁴ as the approval of a clerk's account, as provided by statute, is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items,⁸⁵ and in some states its allowance by a particular court or judge is as conclusive as a judgment.⁸⁶ A disallowance by a comptroller of the treasury of fees claimed by a clerk of the court is not conclusive against the clerk on a petition by him for the recovery of such fees.⁸⁷ In an action by a clerk to recover his salary, annual statements required of the clerk by law are admissible in evidence to show the amounts collected by the clerk and the amounts allowed by the county board as deputy hire.⁸⁸ Questions of fact should be submitted to the jury.⁸⁹ In a proper case, the court will direct payment on the fees;⁹⁰ and the judgment cannot be reversed on the ground that the record fails to show that the amount of the judgment, together with the amount already paid the clerk, would not increase his emoluments beyond the maximum allowed by law.⁹¹

that fees were not paid.—Jeffers v. Taylor, 198 S.W. 1160, 178 Ky. 392.

Collection without suit. It has been held that a clerk of court may deduct his salary and expenses from the fees collected each quarter regardless of when they were earned or accrued.⁹²

(2) Defenses

Fraud or payment to another and de facto officer may constitute a defense to an action by a clerk of court for compensation, although it is ordinarily no defense that the claim was disallowed by auditing officials or that a receipt was given for money not in fact received.

It is no defense to an action by a clerk of court to recover his fees or salary that the claim has been disallowed by the officials authorized to audit the clerk's accounts,⁹³ that the clerk failed to furnish a new bond on being requested so to do,⁹⁴ or that he failed or refused to account for fees received by him.⁹⁵ Alteration of a pay-roll sheet after signature by the clerk and without his consent, showing deductions, is of no legal effect and does not afford any defense to the clerk's suit for salary.⁹⁶ A receipt reciting payment in full will not bar recovery where it appears that the full amount was not in fact received;⁹⁷ but fraud or false representation constitutes a good defense to the action,⁹⁸ as does also payment of salary to a de facto officer for the period for which plaintiff claims salary.⁹⁹

A clerk of court may recover fees due him from a private individual by an action of debt, and under statute by summary remedy, although in the absence of statute he should proceed by action or fee bill.

The fees due a clerk for official services performed by him at the request of a party, being such as are authorized by law, constitute a debt for which an action of debt or indebitatus assumpsit or actions in the nature thereof will lie against such party,¹ even though the party is the successful one in the suit in which the costs accrued;² and the clerk may set off such fees against an action or his bond by the party from whom the fees are due.³ In some jurisdictions a summary remedy is given the clerk by statute;⁴ but in the absence of an ex press provision to that effect, he can proceed only by action or fee bill.⁵ In some jurisdictions, a clerk may maintain an action for his fees without first having placed them in an officer's hands and having had them returned, "No property found";⁶ but in other jurisdictions no action lies for clerks' fees until they are put into an officer's hands for collection, and he has returned that they cannot be levied by distress.⁷ Clerks of court have no lien against a plaintiff's property for fees in cases wherein executions against defendants were returned unsatisfied, so far as summary process is concerned, until the execution has been issued and placed in the sheriff's hands, and the clerk's claim to the proceeds of an execution sale in payment of fees due in other cases becomes subject to the claim of an assignee without notice of the clerk's equities.⁸ Under a statute which imposes on the incoming clerk the duty of finishing all business left unfinished by his predecessor, and which provides that he shall be paid the usual fees for such work by his predecessor, where the latter has received the fees, no action lies for the same until all the unfinished business has been completed.⁹

Distress warrant

A circuit court clerk may under express provision of Ky.St. § 175:

Interest may be allowed in a proper case.¹⁰

Statutes governing suits by clerks of court against public officers have no application to a suit by a clerk on a fee bill against one—not a public officer.¹¹

It is no defense to the action that the clerk has failed to demand his fees in advance, as he is authorized to do by statute,¹² or that he was negligent in the performance of the services for which a recovery is sought.¹³

c. Against Other Officials

In a proper case a clerk of court may proceed by action or bill in equity against another official illegally withholding the clerk's compensation.

An action can be maintained by a clerk of court in his own name, on the official bond of the sheriff, for the recovery of costs collected by the sheriff and due and payable to the clerk,¹⁶ or he may sue in equity to restrain a United States marshal from unlawfully withholding his salary on order of the comptroller.¹⁷

d. Action by Clerk De Facto

De facto clerks of court are not entitled to the salary attached to the office.

In accordance with the rule applicable to de facto officers generally, which is considered in § 145 of the C.J.S. title Officers, also 46 C.J. p 1059 note 70, a de facto clerk of court cannot recover the salary annexed to the office, as the salary is incident to the title to the office and not to its occupation and exercise.¹⁸

§ 31. Penalties and Forfeiture of Fees

Clerks of court are subject to forfeiture of fees or infliction of penalties for sundry derelictions in the performance of their duties, such derelictions ordinarily being specified by statute or rule of court.

Under statute in some jurisdictions a clerk may forfeit his fees for specified causes,¹⁹ or may be subjected to a penalty for certain acts and omissions,²⁰ but in accordance with well settled principles such statutes are to be strictly construed and will not be extended beyond their terms,²¹ nor cover cases not within their purview;²² therefore, if the clerk was not acting in his official capacity at the time of the alleged violation of the statute, no penalty can be imposed.²³ Furthermore, a clerk is liable to a penalty only where expressly made so by statute. The court cannot impose a penalty where the law has imposed none,²⁴ although even in the absence of statute the clerk may forfeit his fees for official misconduct.²⁵ It is sometimes provided by rule of court that for a certain specified cause, the clerk's fees shall not be allowed;²⁶ but such a rule of court is inapplicable to fees for services rendered before its promulgation.²⁷

Denial or deduction of fees has been held proper where there was performance of an unnecessary service,²⁸ or for neglect of duty, or failure to fully perform the particular service for which a fee is desired,²⁹ as in the case of a clerk's dereliction of duty with respect to indexing,³⁰ or the preparation of depositions.³¹ The manner in which the clerk prepares a copy has been held immaterial; he may charge the statutory fee for his services whether he has it printed, typewritten, or written with a pen,³² although fees have been denied where the paper used was too thin.³³

clerk charges illegal fees the court may declare them forfeited.³⁴

In the federal courts, the clerk's right to a docket fee, "where issue is joined," attaches at the time such issue is in fact joined, and is not lost by the subsequent withdrawal of the plea constituting the issue, the statute restricting the docket fee to a smaller amount in a case which is dismissed or discontinued applying only in case of dismissal or discontinuance before the issue has been joined.³⁵ The right to the fee authorized by the latter statutory provision is not lost where there is a discontinuance in one court by reason of the case being transferred to another court for trial.³⁶

Constitutionality of statutes. Statutes allowing such penalties as fixed damages to the injured party have generally been held to be constitutional.³⁷

§ 32. Fees of Clerks of Territorial Courts

The fees of clerks of territorial courts are controlled by federal statutes.

The federal statutes govern the right to, and the allowance of, fees to clerks of territorial courts and are controlling up to the time the territory is admitted as a state.³⁸

III. POWERS AND DUTIES

§ 33. In General

The powers and duties of a clerk of court are ordinarily governed by statutory or constitutional provisions.

The authority of a clerk of court is as a rule entirely statutory, and his official action, to be binding on others, must be in conformity with the statutes.³⁹ Although the duties and authority of the clerk are usually defined by statute,⁴⁰ and it has been said that he has only the powers conferred thereby,⁴¹ and may not go beyond his statutory jurisdiction,⁴² yet where neither the constitution nor the statute prescribes his duties, he is subject to all the legitimate orders of the court of which he is clerk.⁴³ A statute conferring powers on a clerk is to be construed strictly, and will not be extended beyond its terms.⁴⁴

In the absence of any constitutional provision to the contrary, the legislature has full control over the powers and duties of clerks of courts, and may take from, or add to, them;⁴⁵ but powers vested in the clerk by the constitution of the state cannot be taken away from him by statute.⁴⁶

It has been said that the clerk is an integral part of the court and that his acts performed within the scope of his official duties are the acts of the court and must be accepted as true unless their verity is seriously assailed.⁴⁷

The official duties of a clerk of court embrace every act which the law requires him to perform by virtue of his office;⁴⁸ not only those which the statutes expressly impose on him, but also such duties as, by the long established practice of the court, he has been required to perform;⁴⁹ and, likewise, his authority to perform a certain act is sometimes recognized on the ground of long usage.⁵⁰ The clerk may apply to the court or to the judge that he serves for advice in matters pertaining to his office.⁵¹

It has been held that the clerk has no duty to keep parties informed of proceedings or rules of court.⁵²

Duties of clerk to judge. While the duties of a clerk to a judge are not defined by law, they are clearly of a personal, and mainly of a confidential, nature.⁵³

Rules. A clerk of court has the right to adopt reasonable rules for the transaction of the business of his office.⁵⁴

Seal. A court clerk has been held not one of the officers required by law to have and use a seal, the court itself having a seal which he should use as prescribed by statute.⁵⁵

Failure to object to clerk's erroneous actions. Failure to take timely exception to a clerk's erroneous action in the exercise of power he possesses may give such action legal status, but failure to except to the clerk's action in assumption of power he does not possess has no such effect,⁵⁶ although under some practice the clerk should give immediate notice to counsel of record of all orders, judgments, or other papers filed in the cause without being obligated to keep counsel informed of the condition of the record in other respects.⁵⁷

§ 34. Judicial Functions and Proceedings

A clerk of court has certain judicial functions which are considered in the following sections. Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 35. — In Absence of Statute

In the absence of statutory or constitutional authority, a clerk of court has no judicial powers, although he may perform acts of a ministerial and nondiscretionary character with respect to judicial proceedings.

In as much as a clerk of court is essentially a ministerial officer, as is stated in § 1 of this Title, he cannot, without express constitutional or statutory authority to that effect, exercise any judicial functions,⁵⁸ and the court, it has been held, has no power, in the absence of statutory authority, to delegate such matters to the clerk,⁵⁹ although the clerk may properly perform acts which are classified as ministerial.⁶⁰ The attempted performance by the clerk of any function of the judge during his absence, even though done by his direction, is void;⁶¹ but an objection that the clerk, in performing a particular function, was usurping judicial powers is not available on collateral attack.⁶²

§ 36. — When Conferred by Statute

Under statute or constitution in some jurisdictions clerks of court are vested with judicial powers, usually of a limited character and subject to supervision of the judge.

In some jurisdictions clerks of court are, by statute or constitutional provision, vested with certain judicial or quasi-judicial powers.⁶³ Where this is the case the clerk's authority is strictly limited within the terms of the statutory or constitutional provision conferring it.⁶⁴ In some jurisdictions, the performance of such functions by the clerk is subject to the supervision and approval of the judge;⁶⁵ and in some there is provision for an appeal to the judge, or the transmission of certain questions to the judge for decision.⁶⁶

Place of review. Code provisions forbidding the hearing of motions, on proceedings pending in the superior court, outside the county do not apply to appeals from the clerk in partition proceedings, but the latter are governed by other code provisions expressly declaring that the clerk shall send the statement of the case to the judge by mail or otherwise,

During recesses of regular sessions of county courts, clerks thereof are clothed with general jurisdiction to appoint administrators, etc., subject to review by county courts at next regular session.—Starcher v. South Penn Oil Co., 95 S.E. 28, 81 W.Va. 587.

Freeman*, supra.

clearly contemplating that such appeals may be heard outside the county.⁶⁷

§ 37. — Constitutionality of Statute

Statutes purporting to confer judicial powers upon clerks of court are ordinarily invalid, although where the power is more ministerial than judicial the enactment may be upheld.

Various statutes conferring, or purporting to confer, on clerks of court powers of a judicial or semi-judicial character have been held valid,⁶⁸ or invalid,⁶⁹ their validity usually turning on the question of whether or not the power conferred was of a true judicial character, in accordance with principles developed in the C.J.S. title Constitutional Law § 166, also 12 C.J. p 897 note 66 and the C.J.S. title Constitutional Law § 173, also 12 C.J. p 903 notes 41-52.

§ 38. Ministerial Functions and Proceedings

- a. In general
- b. Filing papers
- c. Searching and certifying records

a. In General

The functions of a clerk of court are ordinarily ministerial in character, such as signing warrants, issuing subpoenas and the like, and he should act in accordance with the regulations or orders of the court.

A clerk of court being essentially a ministerial officer, as explained in § 1, and ordinarily lacking judicial powers, as shown in §§ 34-37, as a rule his functions, powers, and duties are ministerial in character.⁷⁰ Aside from merely routine duties, a clerk is entitled to a directing order of the court for his protection;⁷¹ but the clerk need not pass on the legality of orders of the court,⁷² and should obey any order regular on its face,⁷³ the duty of obedience continuing until reversal of the decision.⁷⁴ Among other matters, the following have been held to be included among the powers and duties of a clerk of court: issuance of an alias writ of execution on application of a judgment creditor;⁷⁵ entering subpoenas issued in the subpoena docket;⁷⁶ signing of complaint and warrant in criminal case;⁷⁷ delivery, on application of defendant in a criminal case, accompanied by a proper tender of fees, of a correct transcript of subpoenas issued by the state and filed in the clerk's office;⁷⁸ and issuance and signing of orders and notices of hearings in probate proceedings.⁷⁹ On the other hand, the clerk may not issue county warrants otherwise than on the order of the court, as is shown in the C.J.S. title Counties § 249, also 15 C.J. p 600 note 2, and 11 C.J. p 890 note 76, nor select the tribunal for the trial of a cause.⁸⁰ It is not a part of his duties to draft writs of mandamus.⁸¹ In cases of certiorari the sole duty of the clerk is to write and sign the certiorari, and to keep safely the petition, the writ, and all other papers appertaining thereto subject to the call of the petitioner before service of the writ and subject to the orders of the court after its service. He is not required to see that the writ of certiorari is served, nor is he required to call the attention of the petitioner to the fact that it has not been served.⁸²

Approval of bonds. Clerks are frequently given power to pass on bonds of various kinds required to be filed with them,⁸³ as, for example, as considered in Attachment § 158, the C.J.S. title Sheriffs and Constables §§ 7, 32, also 11 C.J. p 888 note 32, 57 C.J. p 737 notes 24, 25, and other titles wherein the giving and approval of specific bonds are considered. The approval of a bond by a clerk of court is sufficiently evidenced by the fact of his receiving and filing the bond.⁸⁴

Administration of oaths. The authority of a clerk of court to administer oaths other than those administered in open court is statutory and extends to such oaths only as are contemplated by the statute.⁸⁵

Purchasing supplies. A clerk has only such power to purchase supplies as is given him by statute.⁸⁶

b. Filing Papers

Clerks of court should file all legal papers tendered and as a rule are not concerned with their merits.

As has been stated in Corpus Juris and cited with approval, it is the official duty of the clerk of a court to file all the papers in a cause presented by the parties, and to mark them "Filed," with the date of filing.⁸⁷ He has nothing to do with the character, purpose, or merits of papers which are tendered to him,⁸⁸ his duty being merely to file them,⁸⁹ and where the duty to file is imposed by statute, the judge has no authority to interfere therewith.⁹⁰

The clerk's use of superfluous words when filing papers will not invalidate his acts.⁹¹

c. Searching and Certifying Records

It is a function of a clerk of court to attest to and certify the records, although ordinarily he is under no duty to make a search of the same.

Ordinarily, the clerk is authorized to attest and certify the records and proceedings of his court,⁹² but his authority in this regard is only as great as the statute gives him,⁹³ and beyond that his certificate to the record or proceeding is of no greater force or value than the certificate of any other individual,⁹⁴ and he has authority to certify only to the records in his office.⁹⁵

A clerk of a county court can properly certify to the official character of a magistrate.⁹⁶

In certifying his official acts a clerk should use such a signature as will designate the court of which he is the clerk. The mere affixing of the word "clerk" is not sufficient.⁹⁷

The clerk of a court has no right to certify the substance, purport, or effect of a judgment of record in his office.⁹⁸

Except in some jurisdictions,⁹⁹ it is no part of the official duty of a clerk to make searches of the records in his office for judgments, liens, or suits pending, affecting the title to real property, and to certify to the result of such search.¹

Filing with prothonotary in Pennsylvania

§ 39. Care and Custody of Records

The duties and functions of a clerk of court ordinarily include the making, keeping, and preservation of the records thereof.

It is the duty of the clerk to note the orders of the court² and to make a record of the proceedings in his court;³ under some statutes, a clerk of court must record certain papers filed with him,⁴ and he must exercise proper care and diligence in performing such functions.⁵ In so doing he acts as the amanuensis of the court subject to its control, and record entries are valid only when made under the judicial sanction of the court.⁶ It has been held that a clerk may correct an error in his minutes,⁷ and should verify the record and correct any clerical errors,⁸ but after leaving office a clerk has no power to complete a record previously begun,⁹ nor can his successor complete such record without an order of court;¹⁰ neither can he make up a new record from recollection,¹¹ nor substitute his own recollection for the written memorandum of the judge.¹²

The request of a party or his attorney is sometimes necessary to authorize or require a clerk of court to make a final record, or to incorporate a certain matter in the record, of a cause.¹³

Indexing records. Some statutes do not require a clerk of court to make an index of the journals of the court of which he is clerk.¹⁴

Preservation of records. The clerk is the legal custodian of the records in his office and, while not liable as an insurer, he is bound to exercise a high degree of diligence in their preservation and safe-keeping.¹⁵

On abolition of a court, the clerk of the court acquiring the jurisdiction of the abolished court is under a duty to take charge of all records of such abolished court.¹⁶

§ 40. Care and Custody of Funds

Money paid over to a clerk of court in his official capacity is held by him in trust.

Where a clerk of court receives money by virtue of his office, he holds the same in trust.¹⁷ In the absence of statutory authority the clerk has no power to receive payment of a demand which has not been reduced to judgment;¹⁸ but in a jurisdiction where he is authorized to receive payment of a judgment, where he receives money from defendant before judgment, retains it in his hands until after judgment, and then manifests by some plain and unequivocal act his intention to hold it in his official

Recording case

Clerk in recording case record acts as ministerial officer of court, and he must enter orders as directed by court.—People v. Windes, 113 N.E. 949, 275 Ill. 108.

Record in criminal cases

It is not customary in a criminal case for the clerk to note in his minutes the requests for a special charge.—State v. Duperier, 39 So. 455, 115 La. 478—11 C.J. p 886 note 10 [c].

In Pennsylvania

(1) Entries made by a prothonotary during vacation are, until amended or corrected, as much a part of the record as those made by the court while in session.—Miller v. McCullough, 19 Pa.Co. 341, 6 Pa. Dist. 557.

(2) Under the Pennsylvania statute the prothonotary is the officer under whose direction and supervision the transcription of the records, dockets, and indexes of the judgments of the court of common pleas should be done, but the court has no authority to confer upon him the power to do the work or to approve an appointment made by him for the purpose, and there is no provision for his compensation for doing the work.—In re Perry County, 11 Pa. Dist. 557.

capacity as clerk, the payment is good and the judgment thereby discharged.¹⁹ Some statutes authorize a clerk of court to collect fines, penalties, and forfeitures,²⁰ and others impose on him the duty of collecting and receiving jury fees and witness fees.²¹

§ 41. — Control and Disbursement of Funds

Clerks of court receiving funds in their official capacities should control and disburse them under direction of the court.

Clerks of court are not primarily collectors nor custodians of public revenue, but such revenue as comes into their hands ordinarily is incidental to the collection of costs of court.²² When the clerk receives a fund in his official capacity his possession is that of the court, and the court has an inherent right to control such funds,²³ except under some statutory provisions.²⁴ Usually, the clerk has no power, without an order of the court,²⁵ to make any transfer or alteration in the disposition of such fund²⁶ or to pay it out of court,²⁷ or in any way to use it for his own purposes;²⁸ and it has been held that a clerk paying over money contrary to an order of the court will not be protected by an order subsequently procured, on his instance, directing him to pay the money to the one to whom he had already paid it, and not purporting to confirm what he had done.²⁹ However, in some instances a payment without an order of court will be upheld.³⁰

While a clerk of court receives costs deposits in his official and not in his personal capacity,³¹ and is in a sense a trustee rather than a debtor, and under a duty to pay over funds received in his official capacity to the proper parties or authorities,³² he is not to be regarded as a trustee within the meaning of statutory and constitutional provisions regulating investments by trustees, but acts rather as an agent of the court subject to its direction.³³ He may properly deposit funds deposited with him under order of court in a bank in his name as clerk.³⁴

In case of a dispute regarding the ownership of money in the hands of a clerk, it is not proper to direct payment by rule of court to a particular claimant, but the remedy should be by a proceeding at law or in equity.³⁵ The clerk need not pay over the money until after the issue of ownership is determined.³⁶

Under the federal statutes it is the duty of a clerk of a federal court forthwith to deposit with the United States treasurer, an assistant treasurer, or a designated depository of the United States, money coming into his hands, notwithstanding it is immediately levied on under a state writ.³⁷

§ 42. — Duty to Account

Generally speaking, clerks of court are under a duty to account for funds received in their official capacities.

In many jurisdictions it is the duty of the clerk to account for moneys received by him as clerk, and it is frequently provided by statute that he shall pay over to the county treasurer, or to some other designated custodian, fees, costs, taxes, and other moneys, or a specified proportion thereof, received by him in his official capacity;³⁸ but statutes of this character do not apply to the proceeds of a civil judgment in favor of a private person.³⁹ If he refuses to account for or turn over money received by him in his official capacity as clerk, the court may compel him so to do,⁴⁰ even though his term of office as clerk of court has expired.⁴¹ Also, the failure to account for or pay over money received by him in his official capacity constitutes a breach of his official bond for which suit may be brought, as shown infra § 55.

To successor in office. It is generally the duty of the clerk or his personal representative to pay over to his successor in office moneys held by him in his official capacity;⁴² such payment discharges him from all further liability therefor,⁴³ and statutes requiring this of the clerk are constitutional.⁴⁴ An order of court authorizing or requiring it is not a condition precedent to such payment,⁴⁵ nor is a formal settlement necessary under some statutes.⁴⁶ The remedies for a failure to perform this duty vary in the different states.⁴⁷

§ 43. Other Matters

Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 44. Performance of Duty and Summary Remedies to Compel

Clerks of court may be compelled by summary or other appropriate proceedings to perform their official duties.

A clerk of court is obliged to perform the official duties imposed on him by law,⁴⁸ and he may be compelled to do so under rule of court⁴⁹ or by appropriate remedy of a summary character.⁵⁰ In the performance of his duties as the ministerial officer of the court, he is subject to the control of the court;⁵¹ and if he fails or refuses to perform any of such duties, when directed so to do by the court he may be punished for contempt.⁵² On the other hand, a clerk cannot be summarily compelled, by a court other than the one of which he is clerk, to do a certain act;⁵³ nor can the clerk of an inferior court be punished by an appellate court which has not acquired jurisdiction of the cause in which the clerk was derelict in the performance of his duty;⁵⁴ nor is he obligated to perform acts not falling within the scope of his official duties.⁵⁵ A merely ministerial act may be performed by the clerk in term time without an order of the court;⁵⁶ and a statute providing that the clerk shall perform certain duties under the direction of the judge means such direction as the circumstances may require, and does not mean that direction is necessary in order to confer authority on the clerk to act.⁵⁷ Although a clerk fails to perform certain duties of his office, the court cannot authorize another to perform such duties, and thereby render the clerk's sureties liable for the amount paid for the work.⁵⁸ A clerk of court will not be permitted to stultify himself by swearing that he failed to perform his duty, if there is any evidence to the contrary.⁵⁹

§ 45. Time and Place of Performance

In the absence of statutory regulation, a clerk of court may, but need not, perform official duties outside of office hours or away from his office.

While a clerk is, in the absence of any statute requiring it, under no obligation to perform official duties outside of office hours, as for instance to take an appeal on Sunday,⁶⁰ yet he is at liberty to do so if he wishes unless forbidden by some statute.⁶¹ The powers of a clerk in vacation depend for the most part on statute.⁶² The clerk of a federal court has until the end of the term in which to complete the minute entries for the term.⁶³

Place of performance. In the absence of any statute to that effect, a ministerial act of a clerk is not void, although performed away from his office⁶⁴ or even outside of his county;⁶⁵ and ministerial acts need not be performed in court to be valid.⁶⁶ Where a recognizance is required to be taken by the court, the clerk has no authority to take it out of court.⁶⁷

§ 46. Presumption of Performance

There is a presumption that a clerk of court has performed his duties.

It will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that a clerk has performed a duty imposed on him by law.⁶⁸

§ 47. Disqualification to Act

Interest may disqualify a clerk of court from acting, although it has been held that interest will not disqualify him from performing purely ministerial acts.

Under some statutes, a clerk of court is disqualified to perform the duties of his office in relation to a matter in which he has an interest.⁶⁹ Such an interest will always disqualify him from performing acts of a judicial nature;⁷⁰ but it has been held in a number of jurisdictions that he may perform a purely ministerial act, such as the issuance of process, notwithstanding he is a party to the action.⁷¹ An indirect interest in the suit will not disqualify the clerk if he is not a party;⁷² and where he is merely a nominal party, his acting as clerk in the case renders the proceedings irregular, but not void,⁷³ although it has also been held that the clerk's relationship to a party litigant by consanguinity and blood disqualifies him from acting as clerk of court during the trial.⁷⁴ In proceedings before the clerk for the sale of land, he may appoint himself commissioner to make the sale of the land, and may direct himself, as commissioner, to pay over the proceeds to the proper persons.⁷⁵

IV. LIABILITIES

§ 48. In General

Various liabilities of a clerk of court are discussed under appropriate headings in the sections following. Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 49. For Negligence or Misconduct

Clerks of court may be held liable to respond in damages to persons injured by their official negligence or misconduct.

Where a clerk of court fails or refuses to perform, or is negligent in the performance of, a duty imposed on him by law, or is guilty of misconduct in office, the court will sometimes "animadvert upon his conduct;"⁷⁶ and, if his act was the direct and proximate cause⁷⁷ of the injury, without contributory negligence on the part of the party complaining, the clerk is liable in damages therefor both personally and on his official bond,⁷⁸ as where he is derelict in respect of the distribution of funds,⁷⁹ which matter will be considered in more detail in §§ 54-59 infra.

On the other hand, a clerk is not liable for issuing process against property under a standing rule of court, although the court had no jurisdiction in the premises,⁸⁰ for refusing to issue process at the request of one not entitled to its issuance,⁸¹ for turning over trust funds to a trust company without exacting a bond where none is required under statute,⁸² for contesting an affidavit of inability to give a bond, where the law authorizes him to make such a contest,⁸³ for refusing to do an act which he has been enjoined from doing,⁸⁴ for the acts or omissions of his successor in office,⁸⁵ for canceling a mortgage under a forged order,⁸⁶ for an error in interpreting a statute,⁸⁷ for failure to observe a directory provision of a statute,⁸⁸ or for an act done in good faith without the notice or knowledge of plaintiff's rights,⁸⁹ and it has been held that a clerk of court is liable only for willful and malicious disregard of his duties, and in the absence of such willful and malicious disregard may not be held responsible for omitting to summon a delinquent guardian and failing to report his absence to the court.⁹⁰

Matters requiring judge's approval. In matters which the clerk is required to submit to the judge for approval, it will be presumed that they were done under the sanction and direction of the judge; and in such case the clerk is responsible only where he refuses to discharge his duty when requested by the judge, or where he is guilty of fraud in collu-

Character of act or omission for which damages recoverable

As respects liability of chancery clerk for failure to attach to claim against estate certificate that claim was probated, allowed, and registered, probating, allowing, and registering of claims against estate are not "judicial acts" but ministerial acts for nonperformance of which damages may be recovered.—Poyner v. Gilmore, 158 So. 922, 171 Miss. 859.

Erroneous records

If clerk of court of appeal should make erroneous records regarding time of filing transcript and insist that records are correct, party complaining could seek to hold clerk and bondsman liable for injury in separate proceedings.—Riverside Transfer Co. v. Service Drayage Co., 135 So. 79, 16 La. App. 621.

Dereliction not shown

There is no cause of action against the clerk of a court of record, in favor of a litigant, because of the fact that the clerk paid to an attorney of record, out of the judgment recovered and paid into court, his fee, under the terms of his contract of employment with the litigant.—Vance v. sion with the judge. Such duties are not governed by the same principles that regulate the duties which he is required to perform independent of, and without regard to, the dictation of any superior.⁹¹

Where no duty imposed by law. A clerk of court incurs no official liability by failing to perform, or for negligently performing, a service which the law does not require of him.⁹² In order to hold the clerk personally liable in such case, plaintiff must show an express agreement to perform such service.⁹³

Where no injury results. In order to recover against the clerk it must be shown that some injury resulted from his act or omission.⁹⁴ If the action is based on the clerk's official bond, something more than nominal damages must be shown to maintain the action;⁹⁵ but the contrary has been held.⁹⁶

Defaults of deputy. Defaults committed by a deputy clerk while acting within the scope of his duties and in the name of his principal are, in legal contemplation, the defaults of the clerk himself, and the latter is liable accordingly to third persons injured thereby;⁹⁷ but the clerk is not liable for the negligence or omissions of his deputy in performing acts not required of him.⁹⁸

§ 51. — Discriminating between Judgment Creditors

A clerk of court may be held responsible for damages resulting from unlawful discrimination as between judgment creditors.

Where two creditors obtain judgment against their common debtor at the same time, and the clerk wrongfully issues execution to one of them, whereby he obtains a priority over the other, the latter may recover in an action on the official bond of the clerk whatever damage he may have sustained by reason of such discrimination.¹

§ 52. — Approving Insufficient Bond

A clerk of court is ordinarily liable for damages resulting from his negligent approval of an insufficient bond.

Where it is a part of the clerk's official duty to examine and pass on a certain bond, and he is so negligent in the performance of this duty as to cause damage, he can be held liable personally,² and on his official bond therefor;³ but there is no liability if no injury results,⁴ or if the bond is one which the clerk is not by law required to examine and approve.⁵ Proof of negligence is essential to recovery,⁶ and the measure of the clerk's duty usually extends no further than the use of due care in ascertaining the sufficiency of the sureties.⁷ He cannot be considered an insurer of a bond which in his official capacity he has examined and approved as sufficient,⁸ and whether he made proper investigation, and was justified on that investigation in approving the bond, is necessarily a question of fact.⁹

Appeal bonds. It is generally one of the official duties of a clerk of court to pass on the sufficiency of the sureties offered on an appeal bond. Notwithstanding the approval of the bond is a quasi-judicial act, when a supersedeas is granted conditioned on the approval of a bond by the clerk, if the clerk negligently and without making due inquiry as to the sufficiency of the sureties approves such bond, it is a breach of the duty imposed on him by law and covered by the conditions of his bond.¹⁰

The validity of an appeal bond, and of a supersedeas bond, as affected by the necessity of approval by the clerk of court, are treated in Appeal and Error §§ 556 and 651, respectively, and in § 2021 is considered the necessity of approval of an appeal bond by the clerk in order to render the surety liable.

Administrator's bond. Where it is the duty of a clerk to approve an administrator's bond, his negligent acceptance of an insufficient one renders him and the sureties on his official bond liable in damages for any loss which such negligence may occasion.¹¹

§ 53. — Miscellaneous Acts or Omissions

Clerks of courts may in general be liable for damages resulting from any official act or omission within their duties such as failure or refusal to issue process or to record transcripts.

The extent of the clerk's official duties and obligations is, of course, largely dependent on statutory provisions, and in determining whether he is liable in any particular instance reference should be had to the statutes. He is always liable for injuries resulting from his official misconduct¹² or negligence.¹³ Thus a clerk has been held liable for his failure or refusal to issue process,¹⁴ to properly¹⁵ and promptly¹⁶ record a deed or other instrument left with him for recordation,¹⁷ to certify and send up a bill of exceptions,¹⁸ to properly¹⁹ make²⁰ and transmit²¹ a transcript, to collect a state tax,²² to make a correct statement of fees received by him,²³ to enter an action on the docket,²⁴ to enter an attachment within the time fixed by law,²⁵ to enter judgment,²⁶ or for negligence in making such entry,²⁷ for an erroneous entry of satisfaction of a judgment,²⁸ for failing to collect and pay in jury and docket fees,²⁹ for failing to tax costs,³⁰ for failing to copy the sheriff's return on a summons,³¹ for failing to comply with the orders of the court with relation to a partition sale,³² for issuing a writ that does not conform with the judgment,³³ for failing to insert the waiver in a writ of fieri facias issued under a judgment entered by virtue of a warrant of attorney "waiving exemption and inquisition,"³⁴ for issuing a scire facias for too small a

§ 54. Liability for Funds

The matter of a clerk of court's liability for funds is considered in detail in §§ 55-59, following. Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 55. — Funds Held by Virtue of Office

A clerk of court or his bondsman may be held liable for the clerk's wrongful disposition of official funds, although there is no liability for a disposition in accordance with court order irrespective of its ultimate validity.

Where a clerk of court fails to account for and pay over, at the time when it becomes his legal duty so to do, money received and held by him by virtue of his office, he incurs a personal liability,³⁹ and his default constitutes a breach of his official bond,⁴⁰ even though his default occurred previously to the giving of such bond, the liability being regarded as a continuing one.⁴¹ Accounting for such funds is one of the duties of the clerk's office, and is covered by a bond conditioned generally for the faithful discharge of his duties;⁴² and the liability on such bond, for a misappropriation of money held under order of court, cannot be avoided by showing an agreement between the clerk and the party entitled thereto that the clerk should retain the money and pay interest thereon.⁴³ The bondsmen are, likewise, liable if the clerk fails to turn over to his successor in office all moneys paid to, and held by, him as such officer,⁴⁴ although a register or clerk failing to distribute funds and turning them over to his successor is not liable where the funds were still subject to the further order of the court at the time he left office.⁴⁵ A litigant may recover from the clerk an excess of a sum deposited in court over that required to pay the judgment, where the clerk has paid out the full sum deposited.⁴⁶ Where statute or constitution places liability on the clerk to account for funds irrespective of their character if received by virtue of his office, the clerk and his surety may be held for loss of private as well as of public funds so received by the clerk and not repaid;⁴⁷ but the clerk incurs no personal liability for paying out a fund in accordance with the court's decree, although an appeal is pending therefrom, unless the court directs him to retain it;⁴⁸ and in the absence of a ripened lien in the attorney's favor, a clerk of court is not liable to him or his assignee for disbursing the proceeds of a judgment.⁴⁹

Payment to wrong person. Where a clerk, without authority, pays money deposited with him to the wrong person, he is liable for the amount to the person entitled to receive it.⁵⁰

Presumption. In some cases the courts have held that the presumption is, as between the sureties on his bonds, that money coming to his hands during the first term was on hand at the commencement of his second term;⁵¹ but in other cases it has been held that no presumption will be indulged that a clerk who is elected to another term of office, thereby becoming his own successor, paid over to himself, as his own successor, money previously paid into his office,⁵² or that money which came into the principal's official possession while a former bond was in force was in his hands when the second bond was executed.⁵³

When funds held in official capacity. Whether or not a clerk is officially charged with the duty, or vested with the right, to receive money⁵⁴ in any particular instance, or for any particular purpose, without an order of court,⁵⁵ so as to create liability on his bond for a failure to account or pay over is a question depending for the most part on the statutory provisions. There is no presumption that money held by a clerk was acquired by him in an official capacity.⁵⁶ Where the bond covers funds received by the clerk "by virtue or color of his office," the latter term embraces all cases where the clerk receives money in his official capacity when he is not authorized or required to receive the same.⁵⁷ Deposits made to secure costs are received by virtue of the clerk's office so as to come within the condition of his official bond.⁵⁸

Fees of his office. As a general rule, the clerk and his sureties are liable for his failure to account for all receipts in excess of his salary, in those jurisdictions in which the clerk's maximum compensation is limited by law.⁵⁹

Fees of other court officers. Although, in the absence of statutory enactment, it probably is not the duty of a clerk of court to receive costs other than his own, yet, under statutes authorizing costs tendered to be brought into court, the clerk receives such costs by virtue of his office, and the sureties on his official bond are liable for his failure to pay them over to the person entitled thereto;⁶⁰ but some cases hold that fees of other officers collected by the clerk are not held by virtue of his office.⁶¹ The offices of county clerk and clerk of the superior court have been held not so distinct as to render the county clerk and his surety not liable for defalcation of the chief deputy of the clerk of the superior court in respect of converting funds, where the county clerk is ex officio clerk of the superior court.⁶² The clerk and his bondsman may be held liable for misappropriation of official funds by the clerk's deputy.⁶³

Money paid into court by order of court. As has been stated in Corpus Juris, in many states, when money is paid into court by order of the court, the clerk is its proper custodian, and receives it by virtue of his office, and on his failure to account therefor, a recovery may be had on his official bond; and this is true, although such order is based on the practice of the court, and not on direct statutory authority.⁶⁴ Failure of the bond expressly to specify payment to the parties entitled of the money coming into the clerk's hands by court order is immaterial.⁶⁵ It has been held that, where money of an infant was ordered by decree of a court to be paid over by a guardian to the clerk of a court, to be by him invested, the sureties are liable on the official bond in force at the time of the making of the decree, independently of the time when the money was actually received, the decree giving him the right to receive it at any and at all times.⁶⁶

Uncollected funds. The fact that a clerk acted in his official capacity in delivering legal notices to newspaper proprietors for publication does not render him personally liable for failure to pay therefor, where he never received funds for payment from the litigant obligated under statute to pay for the notices, and the sureties on the clerk's bond may not be held liable, although liability does exist as respects both clerk and surety to the extent that funds were received to cover such notices.⁶⁷ Where the clerk does not in fact receive the funds for which suit is brought, there is no liability for his failure to pay them over.⁶⁸

§ 56. — Funds Held in Private Capacity

A clerk of court, but not his bondsman, may be held liable to account for funds held by the clerk in a private capacity.

For a failure of the clerk to account for money not received by virtue of his office there is no liability on the sureties on his official bond, notwithstanding the payment was made in the belief that the money was to be received by him in his official capacity, or was made as compensation for unofficial acts directed by the court.⁶⁹ In such case the person entitled to the money may maintain an action against the clerk personally,⁷⁰ or after his death against his estate.⁷¹

§ 57. — Funds Illegally Collected

Although the bondsman of a clerk of court is not responsible for his disposition of funds illegally collected, the clerk himself may be held liable.

The sureties on a clerk's official bond are not liable for moneys illegally received or collected by him in his official capacity;⁷² but the clerk is personally liable to the county for money improperly paid him in compensation for unofficial acts directed by the court.⁷³

§ 58. — Extent of Liability in General

In some jurisdictions a clerk of court is regarded as an insurer of funds committed to his care, although in others he is liable only for loss resulting from his negligence or misconduct.

It has been held that in the absence of any statute or constitutional provision to the contrary a clerk who receives money by virtue of his office is a bailee and his duty and liability with regard thereto are measured by the law of bailment.⁷⁴ If he acts in good faith and without negligence he cannot be held responsible for the loss of the fund⁷⁵ or for a depreciation of its value.⁷⁶ In other jurisdictions the clerk is liable as insurer for money that comes into his hands, and not merely for a failure to exercise ordinary care.⁷⁷ Other holdings are that a default of the clerk in the payment to the county of surplus fees raises merely the relation of debtor and creditor between them, and does not give the county any special property in deposits of a litigant in the hands of the clerk,⁷⁸ and that, where a clerk pursuant to an order of court loaned a fund in court on mortgage security, he cannot be made liable for his failure to prosecute with diligence the action on the mortgage note in the absence of anything to show that the remedy against the mortgagor has been exhausted.⁷⁹ If the clerk converts to his own use money held by him he is liable for its full value at the time of its conversion.⁸⁰ A clerk depositing money in a bank without court order acts at his peril.⁸¹ He is not liable, however, for acts done under order of court,⁸² and ordinarily the clerk as trustee of the fund, holding it for the benefit of the parties entitled thereto, has the right to invoke the aid of the court to determine the ownership of the fund to be paid out by him.⁸³ The liability of the sureties on the clerk's bond for his failure to account for funds in his hands cannot be limited by any act of the surety himself,⁸⁴ and if the clerk acts in a dual capacity the sureties on his respective bonds are liable pro rata.⁸⁵

The liability of a custodian or depositary of deposits in court is treated in the C.J.S. title Deposits in Court § 9, also 18 C.J. p 778 notes 74, 75.

§ 59. — Interest

A clerk of court receiving no interest on funds entrusted to his care is not, as a rule, liable for interest, although where he has in fact received interest, or where he has misappropriated the funds, he may be held for interest thereon.

Ordinarily a clerk of court is not liable for interest on funds committed to his care,⁸⁶ although where he has in fact received interest thereon he must account for the same.⁸⁷ A clerk is liable for interest lost by his failure to obey an order requiring him to deposit a fund in bank and to take a certificate of deposit bearing interest at a specified rate,⁸⁸ and if he makes an unauthorized use of the money he is chargeable with interest from the time of such misappropriation,⁸⁹ which may be collected from his surety,⁹⁰ although it has also been held that in the case of a surety on a clerk of court's bond interest will be allowed only from the date the action was commenced where there was no demand on the surety prior thereto.⁹¹ Furthermore, the clerk is liable for interest received by him on funds collected for the use of the state and deposited in a bank,⁹² which may be recovered from the sureties in an action on his official bond,⁹³ although it has also been held that, where collection of interest does not fall within the official duties of the clerk, the surety is not liable to the county for interest collected on funds held by the clerk.⁹⁴

The federal government has no claim to interest accrued or paid on a fund constituted from deposits made with the clerk of a federal court by litigants pursuant to a rule of court, to be drawn against by the clerk for the payment of the fees of himself and other officers of the court as they accrue, nor has it any claim to interest received by the clerk on a fund constituted from the fees and emoluments of his office collected and deposited by him pending his semiannual return.⁹⁵

What law governs. The interest allowed is that which may be due under the statute existing when the right to interest accrued.⁹⁶

§ 60. Extent and Duration of Sureties' Liability

The extent and duration of the surety of a clerk of court depend on the provisions of the bond and of the governing statutes.

The liability of the sureties on a clerk's official bond is naturally dependent in a large measure on the form and requirements of the bond itself, as well as on the intention of the statute under which the bond is drawn.⁹⁷ Where the bond is conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties it embraces every duty and obligation imposed on the clerk by express statute or by the practice of the court,⁹⁸ and if the bond is in its terms less broad than the statute requiring it, the provisions of the statute will be read into the bond.⁹⁹ The obligation of the sureties is, however, strictissimi juris, and cannot be extended by construction or implication; they have consented to be bound to a certain extent only, and their liability must be found within the terms of that consent;¹ for acts of the clerk not within the scope of his official duties the sureties are not liable,² and where the alleged breach is not such no liability attaches.³ There can be no recovery in the absence of resultant injury.⁴ The fact that the conditions of the bond, as executed, are less onerous than the statute prescribes does not exempt the sure-

As to making of certified copy of note

Clerk keeps original note probated against estate until creditor requests withdrawal thereof, and clerk's statutory obligation to make certified copy to be retained by him arises only on claimant's request to withdraw original and exists only while original yet remains in clerk's hands, so that, he is not liable for failure to certify copies of notes filed, in absence of allegations that he had assured creditor at time of withdrawal of originals that certified copies had been made and filed, or promised to make and file certified copies after withdrawal.—*Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank v. ties from liability for a breach of the conditions that are contained in it;⁵ nor does the giving of a special bond by the clerk relieve the sureties on his general bond,⁶ although the sureties on the special undertaking cannot be held liable beyond its terms.⁷

The liability of the clerk's sureties as respects funds received or distributed by the clerk has been considered in §§ 54-59.

A bond from the clerk to the judge is designed to protect the latter from the clerk's misconduct and cannot be relied on by the general public, which is protected by the bond of the judge.⁸

§ 61. — Effect of Giving New Bond

Generally speaking, execution and approval of a new bond for a clerk of court releases the sureties on the old bond, although they remain responsible for defaults occurring before the new bond became operative.

Although this is not strictly true in all states,⁹ ordinarily on the execution and approval of a new bond of a clerk of court the responsibilities of the old sureties cease,¹⁰ although they remain liable for defaults which occurred before the new bond became operative,¹¹ and the latter liability cannot be shifted to the sureties on a bond for a succeeding term.¹²

§ 62. — Duties Added after Execution of Bond

The bond of a clerk of court may cover his performance of duties added after execution of the bond where such duties are similar in kind to those pertaining to his office before execution of the bond, but does not cover dissimilar duties subsequently added.

Additional duties imposed by law on the clerk subsequent to the execution of the bond, if not different in kind, but merely in degree, from those formerly pertaining to the office, are covered by the bond;¹³ but as to any duty not in its nature pertinent to the office as it existed when the bond was given, there is no liability on the sureties on such bond.¹⁴

Where clerk appointed receiver. When the clerk is appointed receiver in a cause pending in the court, his sureties cannot be held liable for his default as such receiver.¹⁵

§ 63. — Acts Done before Giving Bond

As a general rule sureties are not liable for acts done by a clerk of court before giving of his bond, although liability may attach where the act constitutes a continuing violation of official duty.

While the sureties are not ordinarily liable for an act done by the clerk previous to the giving of such bond,¹⁶ yet where the act constitutes a continuing violation of official duty the liability attaches to a bond subsequently given.¹⁷

Where the clerk serves successive terms and gives separate bonds with different sureties, the sureties on each bond are liable only for the defaults which occurred during the particular term or period for which it was given, and not for the defaults of a prior term.¹⁸ Each bond is as a rule liable only for defalcations occurring during the term for which it was given.¹⁹ Where a defaulting clerk succeeds

19. N.C.—Lee v. Martin, 123 S.E. 631, 188 N.C. 119, modifying State v. Martin, 118 S.E. 914, 186 N.C. 127.

In absence of contract or statute, surety on clerk's official bond, although the principal and sureties be the same, is not liable for nonperformance of his official duties during another and different term.—Lee v. Martin, supra.

Apportionment of liability

(1) Where bond, given by clerk of court during first term, was kept alive by payment of annual premiums during incumbency of second term, liability of surety should be apportioned to each term as though separate bond for each term was executed for sum named in bond.—Lee v. Martin, supra.

(2) Where money deposited in court is not repaid on demand, if the clerk's bond for any one term be not sufficient to pay judgments against him for defalcations during such term the pro rata interest of each claimant against surety is determinable on basis of principal amount recovered against clerk, plus twelve per cent per annum from time of detention until settlement, not exceed-himself, and has given the required bond for each term, with the same surety, and continues his defalcation, the surety is liable only to the amount of the bond for each term.²⁰ In the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that a misappropriation of funds occurred during the term in which they were received, and the bond for each particular term is liable for the amount then presumptively misappropriated.²¹

§ 64. — Acts Done after Expiration of Term

In the absence of statutes extending liability, sureties may not be held liable for acts of a clerk of court committed after expiration of the term of office covered by the bond.

The contract of the sureties must be strictly construed, and they cannot be held liable for acts of the clerk done after the expiration of the term of office covered by the bond,²² even though the clerk succeeds himself.²³

§ 65. Actions for Damages or on Official Bond

Matters concerning actions for damages against a clerk of court or proceedings on his official bond will be considered in detail in §§ 66-77. Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 66. — Right of Action

One injured by a clerk of court's default ordinarily has cumulative remedies on the bond or against the clerk personally.²⁴ No right of action accrues until the plaintiff's right has been established and an infringement thereof has occurred.

The remedy on the clerk's bond is cumulative,²⁴ and does not prevent a personal action against him by any person suffering damage from his official malfeasance or nonfeasance;²⁵ and a statutory summary remedy is not exclusive, so as to prevent an action being brought against the clerk.²⁶

The authority to sue a clerk of court for fees collected and not accounted for will sustain such suit even if recovery is also asked for fees which should have been collected.²⁷

When right of action accrues. A right of action against a clerk for negligently approving and accepting an insufficient stay bond does not accrue until the expiration of the stay;²⁸ and the right to sue the clerk on his bond for the wrongful taxation of costs does not accrue until after such costs have been retaxed by the judgment of the court.²⁹ No right of action on a clerk of court's bond accrues for his nonpayment of money to plaintiff until plaintiff's right to the money has been established.³⁰

Where bond lost. Where a clerk's official bond is lost, and no certified copy thereof can be obtained, a person having a right of action against the clerk on such bond can maintain a suit in equity against the sureties to establish the bond and to obtain leave to sue on it.³¹

§ 67. — Nature and Form of Action

Either assumpsit or money had and received may lie against a clerk of court for money received and unaccounted for, or an action of debt may be brought on his official bond. In some jurisdictions statutes afford a summary remedy.

Assumpsit lies on the part of a county to recover of a clerk of court money received by him and not accounted for when he in equity or good conscience ought to account for it;³² and an action for money had and received may be maintained against a clerk where the money in question was not received by virtue of his office.³³ Also, where the clerk converted to his own use money deposited with him by a party under rule of court, and subsequently ordered repaid, the depositor can recover it in an action for money had and received.³⁴ The proper form of action on the clerk's official bond for an alleged negligent performance of his official duties is

When amount of attorney's lien of judgment in favor of client is established, which it was not in the case at bar, a duty is then imposed on clerk to pay it to them from amount thereof in his hands so as to render him liable on his bond on failure so to do, but until such trial there is no right of action.—State v. Bleeke, supra.

debt;³⁵ but, if the action is against the clerk personally for negligence in the discharge of his duties, the right of action is founded, not on contract, but on breach of duty.³⁶

In some jurisdictions the statutes provide a summary remedy³⁷ for injuries arising from breaches of duty on the part of clerks of court. Such remedy being of statutory origin and in derogation of the common law must be strictly pursued and cannot be extended by construction.³⁸ The question whether notice is required depends on the terms of the statute.³⁹

§ 68. — Conditions Precedent

A court order to the clerk to pay over money may be a condition precedent to a suit against him for not paying it over.

Where money is held by a clerk in his official capacity subject to the orders of the court, no right of action accrues against him for not paying it over, until the court orders him so to do;⁴⁰ but in Missouri, if the clerk makes a false report of the fees received by him, suit may be brought on his bond without any previous order to him to pay over.⁴¹ Furthermore, it is unnecessary to fix the liability of the principal on a clerk's official bond before a recovery can be had against the sureties.⁴² When the action is based on the clerk's negligent failure to record a materialman's lien within the time prescribed by statute, the materialman need not show, before recovering his damages from the clerk and his sureties, that he has unsuccessfully prosecuted a foreclosure proceeding.⁴³

§ 69. — Time to Sue and Limitations

Suits for default of a clerk of court should be brought within the time limited by statute.

The period of limitation on an action against a clerk of court is governed by statute in the various jurisdictions.⁴⁴ The applicable statute of limitation does not commence to run until the cause of action accrues; and a fraudulent concealment of the cause of action will delay the operation of the statute until after discovery of the fraud.⁴⁵ Suit against the surety is not premature where brought before expiration of the clerk's term for moneys received and not accounted for at the time designated by statute.⁴⁶ Delay without prejudice to defendant will not bar an action on a clerk of court's bond, brought within the statutory period.⁴⁷

§ 70. — Defenses in General

It is a defense to an action for a clerk of court's default to show that he was acting under order of the court. The clerk may defend as a rule by showing his exercise of due care, although negligence of third persons constitutes no defense.

While the clerk and his sureties may defend by showing that he was acting under the orders of the court,⁴⁸ and in a proper case a set-off may be set up in an action on the clerk's bond,⁴⁹ in order successfully to defend a personal action against him for an alleged negligent performance of his duties, the clerk must show that he exercised reasonable and ordinary care and diligence.⁵⁰ Negligence of others in the performance of their duties does not furnish a defense to a clerk of court for nonperformance of his own duty,⁵¹ and many particular matters have been held not to constitute defenses in actions against the clerk or his sureties.⁵²

§ 71. — Contributory Negligence of Plaintiff

The contributory negligence of plaintiff may afford a defense to an action for damages alleged to have arisen from default of a clerk of court, although it has been held no defense to an action on the bond.

Where, but for the negligence of the party complaining, the injury would not have occurred the clerk cannot be held liable;⁵⁴ but the fact that plaintiff did not personally supervise the performance of a duty imposed by law on the clerk is no defense to an action against the clerk for a failure to perform such duty;⁵⁵ and in other cases there has been held to be no such negligence, or implication thereof, on the part of plaintiff, as to defeat recovery.⁵⁶

Contributory negligence has been held no defense to an action on the bond of the clerk.⁵⁷

§ 72. — Jurisdiction and Venue

Statutory provisions ordinarily control matters of jurisdiction and venue of actions against a clerk of court or his bondsman.

The jurisdiction of actions and proceedings against clerks of courts is dependent on the statutes in the various jurisdictions, as will appear from an examination of the cases cited infra this note.⁵⁸

§ 73. — Parties

The general rules control in respect of parties to actions against a clerk of court or his bondsman, which actions should be brought by or on behalf of the real party in interest and are not ordinarily restricted to the party named as obligee in the bond.

As a general rule, an action for damages may be brought against the clerk by any person injured by his breach of duty,⁵⁹ or by the proper public authorities;⁶⁰ but the liability of a clerk for not including a judgment in a certificate of search is only to the person employing him to make the search,⁶¹ and only the parties interested in, and who had a right to have, the instrument recorded can maintain an action against the clerk for failure to keep a file book for entering mortgages, and to record a mortgage,⁶² and whatever liability may be incurred by a clerk in respect of a certificate as to title to realty is to the person for whom the certificate was intended and not to the latter's grantee.⁶³ Where clerks of courts are bound by statute to pay to the county treasurer all fines received by them in criminal cases, they are not liable to actions by cities or towns to whose use the fines are appropriated by statute.⁶⁴ Under some statutes, an action cannot be sustained by a person entitled to a distributive share of an intestate's estate against the clerk of the county court for neglecting to take an administration bond.⁶⁵

restricted to the obligee named in the bond,⁶⁶ and under some statutes an action thereon may be brought by the person injured in his own name,⁶⁷ or must be brought, if at all, in his name,⁶⁸ yet an action on the bond is usually required to be brought in the name of the state,⁶⁹ the United States government,⁷⁰ or the governor of the state,⁷¹ for the benefit of the real party in interest;⁷² but it is unnecessary to aver that the action is for the use and benefit of another.⁷³ One who has purchased a forged warrant from a clerk of court cannot maintain a suit on the clerk's bond, where the assignment of the warrant to him is not in the statutory form.⁷⁴ In Pennsylvania, a litigant cannot maintain a suit in his own name for his individual use against the sureties on the official bond of a prothonotary and clerk of court;⁷⁵ and the prothonotary in office is the proper plaintiff, to the use of the court, in an action on the official bond of a former prothonotary to recover a deficit in his account for moneys paid into court.⁷⁶

Where the county is the party in interest the action may, it has been held, be brought in its name,⁷⁷ or should be for the use of the officer or board authorized to represent the county in that regard, such as the county treasurer,⁷⁸ county attorney,⁷⁹ county commissioners,⁸⁰ or the auditor.⁸¹ A county may sue on the bond of a clerk of court elected by the county for failure to record pleadings and judgments as required by law, and especially for failure to record criminal cases, for which he has been paid by the county;⁸² but where the duties required to be performed for the county are secured by a separate bond as county clerk, the county cannot sue for a breach of such duties on the bond given to protect parties having business in the county court.⁸³ Where, however, the county court has no interest in moneys received by the clerk in his official capacity, it may not maintain an action on his bond in respect of such moneys.⁸⁴

An objection that the action is not brought in the name of the state can be raised by demurrer only.⁸⁵

Defendants. It seems that if the action is brought simply for neglect of duty on the clerk's part, his sureties cannot be made parties to such an action.⁸⁶ Where the clerk is dead, and his estate is insolvent, it is not necessary to bring his representative before the court in order to fix the liability of his sureties.⁸⁷ It has been held that the surety may be sued without joining the clerk as a party.⁸⁸

In receivership proceedings to liquidate the securities of a deceased clerk of court, representing commingled public and personal moneys amply sufficient to discharge official obligations, the sureties on the clerk's bonds are not necessary nor proper parties, and may not be retained, over their objec-

§ 74. — Pleading

Under the general rules of pleading, which control in respect of complaints, answers, and issues, proof, and variance in actions for default of a clerk of court, the complaint should ordinarily show the clerk's breach of duty and the plaintiff's damage, and where the action is on the bond so much thereof should be set forth as shows plaintiff to be entitled to his cause of action.

Declaration, petition, or complaint. In an action to recover damages for the misfeasance or nonfeasance of a clerk of court, the declaration, petition, or complaint must, of course, contain sufficient allegations to show a cause of action.⁹⁰ The breach of duty complained of must be alleged with sufficient particularity to apprise defendant of the nature of the demand against him,⁹¹ and actual damage resulting from such breach must be averred,⁹² although the complaint may be held sufficient where the right to nominal damages sufficiently appears.⁹³ Where the breach assigned is a failure of the clerk to account for money received by virtue of his office it must be alleged that the clerk received such money⁹⁴ and held it in his official capacity,⁹⁵ although matters which will be presumed need not be averred.⁹⁶ Where the action is brought on the clerk's bond the declaration or complaint must set out so much of such bond as entitles plaintiff to his cause of action,⁹⁷ and its averments will be construed strictly against the pleader,⁹⁸ although whatever is necessarily implied in, or is reasonably to be inferred from, the allegations is to be taken as directly averred.⁹⁹ In a suit on the bond, brought in the name of the state by the party injured, it is sufficient to name the person for whose use the suit is brought without setting forth the nature of his interest.¹ A petition disclosing that the bond sued on was executed subsequent to the term in which an alleged defalcation occurred is demurrable.² Failure to show when a default occurred and which of several sureties is liable therefor is not, however, necessarily fatal to a petition.³

Surplusage in the declaration or petition in an action on the clerk's bond does not render it demurrable.⁴

Plea or answer. Nul tiel record is not a good plea in an action on the bond of a clerk of court, although the bond is by law directed to be recorded.⁵ Defendant may amend his answer so as to set up an additional defense to an action against him for neglect of duty.⁶ A plea by a surety on a clerk's

Under statute

Overruling special exceptions to municipality's petition against all sureties on official bonds of district court clerk to recover city funds misappropriated by clerk on ground of lack of showing exactly when misappropriation occurred and, therefore, which surety company was liable is not error, in view of statute permitting such suit if it is difficult to determine when default occurred and which surety is liable therefor. —Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. State for Use and Benefit of City of Dallas, supra.

Effect of presumption

In municipality's suit against three different sureties on official bonds of district court clerk to recover municipal funds deposited with clerk and misappropriated by him at unknown date, it would be assumed that misappropriation occurred during period covered by first surety bond, where balance in clerk's trust fund was reduced during that period to amount less than amount deposited by city. —Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. bond in a county's action thereon that the state also had a claim against the clerk which might support an action on the identical bond is not a plea in bar of the county's action.⁷

Issues, proof, and variance. Under a general denial in an action on the bond of a clerk of court, defendant may offer in evidence any circumstance tending to prove that the acts complained of were not a breach of the bond as alleged.⁸

§ 75. — Evidence

The burden of proving his case rests on one suing a clerk of court or his surety, and general rules control the admissibility and sufficiency of the evidence in such actions.

A plaintiff suing a clerk of court or his bondsman has the burden of proving his case,⁹ although where the clerk fails to pay on demand moneys coming into his possession and for which he should account there arises a presumption of his conversion of the same,¹⁰ casting on the clerk the burden of proving the contrary,¹¹ and the burden of proof rests on defendant to establish his defenses to the action,¹² or to show private ownership of a part of the fund

not accounted for.¹³ Where the report of a clerk fails to comply with statutory requirements, it will not constitute prima facie evidence of the correctness of the entries therein.¹⁴ After a considerable length of time, payment over by the clerk may be presumed.¹⁵ There is no presumption, in an action on the clerk's bond for failure to account for money, that the misappropriation occurred at any particular time;¹⁶ but circumstantial evidence may be admitted to show the time when the misappropriation occurred.¹⁷

The admissibility¹⁸ and sufficiency¹⁹ of the evidence in an action against a clerk of court or his surety is governed by the general rules.

To recover damages for a breach of duty on the part of a clerk the delinquency must be established by competent evidence,²⁰ and actual loss resulting therefrom must be proved.²¹ Where the action is based on a failure of the clerk to account for funds, records in other causes are admissible to show the amounts received,²² and entries made by the clerk in books kept for that purpose are prima facie evidence of the receipt of such money;²³ but such evidence may be rebutted by proof that no such payments were in fact made.²⁴ Evidence that the clerk had on deposit in bank, to his credit officially, money in excess of the amount claimed to have been embezzled, is rightly excluded.²⁵ A judgment rendered on an application to retax costs is prima facie evidence of liability on the part of the clerk and his sureties for the original wrongful taxation, but it is only prima facie evidence.²⁶

The fact of a jury trial, in an action on the clerk's bond involving jury fees, must be shown by the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits.²⁷

§ 76. — Trial, Judgment, and Review

a. Trial

b. Judgment

a. Trial

Questions of fact arising in an action against a clerk or his surety are for the jury on conflicting evidence, and the general rules control as to dismissal and nonsuit and the verdict and findings in such an action.

Where an action on the clerk's official bond is tried before a jury, questions of fact are to be determined by the jury;²⁸ but where the trial is not before a jury, it is competent for the court to ascertain all the facts and determine the amount due.²⁹

According to the evidence received in the particular case, it has been held that the trial court properly refused to direct a verdict for plaintiff,³⁰ or erred in granting a nonsuit.³¹

The verdict in an action against a clerk of court or his sureties should either be general or, if special, should find all the facts on which the liability of defendants depends.³² However, a verdict properly given for the penalty of the bond will not be vitiated by additional findings for the parties injured by the default, as such findings may be rejected as surplusage.³³

b. Judgment

Under the general rules which govern judgments, in actions against a clerk of court and his surety a judgment on the bond may properly be rendered for the penalty with execution for the assessed damages.

In an action on a clerk's bond, judgment is properly rendered for the penalty with execution for the assessed damages,³⁴ and in some states a judgment for the penalty stands for the benefit of all parties who may show that they have been injured.³⁵ The judgment may go against any number of the defendants warranted by the testimony.³⁶

§ 77. — Damages

The measure of a plaintiff's recovery for default of a clerk of court is ordinarily the actual loss suffered, although in a proper case nominal damages may be awarded.

The amount of damages which may be recovered is measured by the actual loss resulting to plaintiff by reason of the clerk's breach of duty,³⁷ although in a proper case plaintiff may be entitled to at least nominal damages irrespective of the actual loss.³⁸ Where the clerk admits that he has converted an uncertain amount which is obviously a certain amount or more, a recovery for the certain amount is justified.³⁹

It has been held that one securing judgment against the surety on a clerk's bond for the full amount of his demand need not prorate with those who have not even filed suit to recover on the bond, although the penalty of the bond is less than the total amount of claims.⁴⁰

40. Idaho.—Power County v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 260 P. 152, 44 Idaho 609.

§ 78. Actions for Penalties

Actions for penalties are maintainable against a clerk of court although usually not against his surety. The complaint must contain averments duly bringing the case within the statute.

Penalties are usually recoverable in an action against the clerk personally, as his sureties are not liable therefor,⁴¹ but the right to sue on the bond for the actual damages sustained by reason of the clerk's delinquency is not taken away by a statute providing a penalty for the same act,⁴² nor is the right of action for the penalty taken away because the same act is also made a crime. The remedies are cumulative.⁴³

Under some statutes it is no defense to the action to recover the penalty, that the officer acted honestly and in good faith;⁴⁴ or that he was not able to do the work of his office in the manner and within the time required by law;⁴⁵ or that he has accounted for the money in question, where he has not also paid it over;⁴⁶ but in some cases the clerk may defend by showing that he used due diligence to get a commissioner of the revenue to compare his account with the books in his office and to certify thereon as the law requires, and was prevented by the default of such commissioner from obtaining a quietus.⁴⁷ It is not a defense to an action to recover a penalty for failure to transmit a transcript that an arbitration was pending and contemplated by the parties, and on account thereof the clerk withheld the transcript,⁴⁸ unless the attorney for one of the parties requested the clerk to withhold the transmission of the transcript, pending the settlement of a proposition to arbitrate.⁴⁹

The declaration, petition, or complaint in an action to recover the penalty must set forth every fact necessary to show that the case is within the statute,⁵⁰ and specifically comply with statutory requirements,⁵¹ but it need not aver loss or damage.⁵²

What law governs. Statutes in force at the time when the right accrued control as to penalties.⁵³

§ 79. Criminal Responsibility

Clerks of court may be held criminally responsible for acts or omissions in violation of specific statutory provisions or for other derelictions in official duty made criminal offenses by general statutes.

In some jurisdictions clerks of court are, by statute, made criminally liable for certain acts and omissions,⁵⁴ such as a failure to report receipts of money,⁵⁵ taking and collecting illegal fees,⁵⁶ or a failure to pay over fees and other public moneys as required by law.⁵⁷ Sometimes the code or statutory provisions of the state make it a misdemeanor for a clerk to fail to perform any duty imposed on him, for the failure to perform which no other penalty is provided;⁵⁸ but a clerk being a mere ministerial officer cannot be held criminally responsible for obeying the orders of the court, even though the court has no authority to make such orders.⁵⁹

Motive. It has been held that if defendant's acts or omissions are intentional his motives are immaterial.⁶⁰

What law governs. Specific provisions of a fees and salaries act have been held to govern a prosecution of a clerk of court for failing and refusing to pay into the county treasury fees charged and collected as costs where the penal law expressly provides that wherever specific provisions exist making a particular act criminal such specific statutes shall control as against the general penal law.⁶¹

§ 80. — Indictment

Indictments of clerks of court for breach of official duty should comply with the general rules, and show an offense within the contemplation of the statute invoked.

It is necessary and sufficient that the allegations of the indictment show an offense within the contemplation of the statute, and in the notes below will be found references to cases wherein particular indictments were held sufficient or insufficient.⁶² Where certain cases are excepted from the operation of the act the indictment need not show that the case is not one of those excepted.⁶³

Where the clerk is charged with collecting and failing to pay over money belonging to the county, the proof must show that the collection was made in money or its equivalent;⁶⁴ but there is no variance where the proof shows a reception of checks and drafts and a conversion thereof into money.⁶⁵

§ 81. — Evidence

The customary presumption of innocence and requirement that guilt be proved beyond a reasonable doubt apply in a prosecution of a clerk of court.

The general rules that defendant is presumed innocent of the offense charged against him, and that the state must prove his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, apply to trials on indictments against clerks of courts.⁶⁶

Under the general rules the evidence in particular cases has been held sufficient to support a conviction for refusal to pay over funds to a successor,⁶⁷ or for the giving of a false certificate.⁶⁸

§ 82. — Trial, Sentence, and Punishment

The court should charge the jury respecting the circumstances under which a clerk of court may be convicted of the offense for which he is indicted.

The court should clearly state in charging the jury the circumstances under which defendant may be convicted.⁶⁹

V. DEPUTIES AND ASSISTANTS

§ 83. Nature and Distinctions

Deputy clerks of court are sometimes regarded as mere agents of the clerk, and sometimes regarded as officers of the court, in accordance with varying statutory provisions.

As a general rule a deputy clerk of court is regarded as merely an agent of his principal, because he usually acts in his principal's name, and the principal is answerable for his misconduct;⁷⁰ but in some jurisdictions a deputy is recognized as an officer, and is not merely the private agent of his principal.⁷¹

Deputy clerks are in such jurisdictions regarded as officers of the court,⁷² and may be state officers,⁷³ although it has been held that they are not state officers within the meaning of constitutional provisions regulating civil service.⁷⁴ The position of chief deputy is a public office.⁷⁵ A deputy county clerk may be an ex officio clerk of another court.⁷⁶

Creation of office. In the absence of some special charter provision or legislative enactment, the office of deputy clerk in a municipal corporation court should be created only by ordinance.⁷⁸

§ 84. Appointment

Generally speaking, deputy or assistant clerks of court may be appointed by the clerk subject, in some jurisdictions, to approval of other officers or boards, and appointment should be made in a form complying with any applicable statutory provisions.

By statute in many jurisdictions authority is expressly conferred on clerks to appoint deputies,⁷⁹ or assistants,⁸⁰ subject, in some jurisdictions, to the determination of another officer or board as to the necessity of the appointment or the number of deputies to be appointed.⁸¹ Deputies may not be appointed pursuant to statutes inapplicable to the particular court to which appointment is purported to be made,⁸² although it seems the power of appointing a deputy exists independently of any statutory authority;⁸³ but in order to make a valid appointment the clerk must himself have power to exercise the functions of his office.⁸⁴ In some jurisdictions, or at least as to some courts in a few jurisdictions, the power of appointing deputy clerks is vested in the judge of the court in which he is to act.⁸⁵ It will be presumed that the laws of another state authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk.⁸⁶

Constitutional provisions to the effect that a county clerk shall be clerk of a particular court within the county are not violated by statutes authorizing the justices of such courts to appoint persons to perform clerical duties connected with the court, and the county clerk may be reasonably controlled as to the number, compensation and manner of appointment of his deputies.⁸⁷

Sufficiency of appointment. Whatever constitutional or statutory provisions exist relative to the method to be pursued by the clerk in appointing or engaging deputies or assistants must be followed.⁸⁸ It seems that, in the absence of any statutory inhibition,⁸⁹ an oral appointment is sufficient,⁹⁰ especially with regard to the performance of an act by a third person, in the presence and under the direction of the clerk, for such an act is in fact that of the clerk himself.⁹¹ It will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that a person acting as deputy clerk was duly appointed and qualified;⁹² and the court may take judicial notice of the clerk's legally appointed deputies, their names and signatures, or, if the written authority issued by a principal to his deputy has been lost, oral evidence may be admitted to prove the appointment.⁹³ The regularity of the appointment of deputy clerk of court cannot be collaterally attacked.⁹⁴

Number appointed. Under statutes creating the office of deputy clerk, to be appointed by the clerk, with full power to transact all business of such clerk, it has been held that the power to appoint is not limited to one, but as many deputies may be appointed as are necessary,⁹⁵ although in another juisdiction it has been held that the clerk may appoint only one deputy.⁹⁶

§ 85. — De Facto Deputies

One in fact acting as a deputy clerk of court but under an irregularity of appointment or qualification is ordinarily regarded as a de facto clerk whose acts are valid.

A person claiming to be a deputy clerk by virtue of an appointment, and recognized as such by the public, is at least a de facto deputy; and his acts are valid notwithstanding some defect or irregularity in his appointment or qualification.⁹⁷ It has been held that a regularly appointed deputy clerk who remained in office after his term expired under an irregular oral appointment for the second term of the clerk is a de facto deputy clerk of court,⁹⁸ although it has been held that one who has been deputy county clerk during the first term of the clerk, and who continues to act without re-appointment during his second term, is not a de facto officer.⁹⁹

§ 86. Eligibility and Qualification

The matter of eligibility and qualification of deputy clerks of court is ordinarily governed by applicable statutory or constitutional provisions, and in the absence of positive prohibition one may be a deputy clerk although not a voter.

The legislature may within its reasonable power of regulation prescribe qualifications for persons to be employed as deputy clerks of court.¹

or position of deputy clerk may be held by one who is not a qualified voter,² such as a minor³ or a woman,⁴ and, under constitutional provisions enabling women to vote, a woman may act as a deputy clerk of court.⁵ Where a minor is ineligible, his acts may nevertheless be valid as those of a de facto officer if he is recognized by the public as a deputy.⁶

Qualification. Provision is usually made by statute for the qualification of deputy clerks, as by taking the prescribed oath and giving bond.⁷ A deputy who fails to qualify as the statute requires has no power to perform any of the duties of the office,⁸ although the validity of his acts may be upheld as a de facto deputy, as shown in § 85. In some jurisdictions, the clerk may require a bond from his deputy to indemnify himself in case he is held liable for his acts or omissions. If the clerk fails to demand such a bond, he cannot complain of the enforcement of his statutory liability for the malfeasance of his deputy.⁹

§ 87. Term of Office

The term of a deputy clerk of court's office is such as may be prescribed by law, or in the absence of statutory or constitutional regulation he may hold for the period of good behavior and during the term of office of the appointing power.

If a statute providing for the appointment of deputy or assistant clerks of court fails to define the period for which they shall hold office, they hold only during good behavior;¹⁰ and sometimes it is expressly provided that they shall hold at the pleasure of the appointing power.¹¹ While, under some statutes, an assistant clerk of a particular court holds over until his successor is appointed,¹² the term of a clerk to a justice expires with that of the justice making the appointment,¹³ the appointment of a "successor" to fill a vacancy created by resignation has been held valid for the unexpired term of office only,¹⁴ and where there is no such office as that of assistant clerk of a particular court, a person referred to as an assistant clerk does not succeed to that office when it is created for the first time on the consolidation of that court with another one.¹⁵ Where the clerk is a constitutional officer, a statute providing for the appointment of a deputy for a term extending beyond that of an incumbent clerk is unconstitutional as depriving the incoming clerk of part of his office, namely, the power of the appointment of, and the control over, his deputies.¹⁶

§ 88. Resignation, Suspension, and Removal

A deputy or assistant clerk of court may be removed for cause, and in the absence of contrary provision of law may be removed without cause at the pleasure of the appointing authority.

The right to remove a deputy or assistant clerk of court belongs to the appointing official as a necessary incident to his power to appoint,¹⁷ and it has been held that deputy clerks of court are not within the protection of constitutional or statutory provisions precluding removal without cause.¹⁸ However, under civil service laws, the chief clerk of the law department in a clerk's office is entitled to notice and an opportunity to explain before he can be dismissed.¹⁹ A deputy clerk of court may be removed for cause.²⁰ It has been held that an act passed after appointment of a deputy clerk of court will not authorize his removal for grounds other than those specified in the statute in force when he was appointed, although on a reorganization of the courts effected by such subsequent statute, the power of removal is not confined to the officer formerly holding such power.²¹

§ 89. Compensation

Deputy and assistant clerks of court are ordinarily entitled under express or implied statutory authorization to compensation which may be recovered in appropriate proceedings.

Ordinarily, provision is made by statute for the compensation of deputy clerks²² and assistants,²³ and compensation may not be recovered under a statute inapplicable to the deputy clerk seeking the same,²⁴ although, even in the absence of an express provision for compensation, a statute authorizing the appointment of a deputy will also carry the power to provide for his compensation.²⁵ Under applicable statutes it has been held that the fixing of compensation of deputy and assistant clerks of a circuit court lies with the county court notwithstanding general provisions of a budget law forbidding the county court to revise estimates of expenditures duly made by the circuit court and its clerk,²⁶ or that concurrent action is essential in fixing the compensation of deputy and assistant clerks of court.²⁷ In fixing the salary of a deputy or assistant the court may properly consider his qualifications, experience, and capacity.²⁸ Where a clerk is allowed, by the county board, a certain sum for deputy hire, he is not obliged to let the office of deputy to the lowest bidder.²⁹ Where the deputy's remuneration is not otherwise provided for, it is not improper for the clerk to contract with him that he shall receive a certain share of the fees taxed and collected during the deputyship,³⁰ and under statute it has been held that deputies may look to the fees of the clerk's office remaining unpaid at expiration of the clerk's term for payment of any salaries due and unpaid to themselves.³¹

Increase³² or decrease³³ of the compensation of a deputy or assistant during his term will depend largely on applicable statutory provisions.

Extra or additional compensation is not ordinarily allowable to a salaried assistant clerk of court,³⁴ and a county clerk acting as ex officio deputy clerk of a district court has been denied the right to compensation additional to his salary as county clerk.³⁵

Reimbursement for deputy hire. A clerk of court may employ deputies only on application to the person and at the time specified by statute, and has been denied the right to a nunc pro tunc order approving disbursements for clerk hire where no previous disposition had been made.³⁶ A clerk employing more deputies than authorized by law and paying them out of his own funds may recover for the compensation of only the number he was authorized to employ.³⁷ The clerk may not recover from the county more than he has actually paid his deputy.³⁸

Validity of statutes and ordinances. The courts have upheld the validity of statutes regulating salaries of deputy clerks irrespective of their reasonableness,³⁹ and ordinances fixing the compensation of deputy or assistant clerks of police courts have been upheld.⁴⁰

Proceedings to recover fees or salary. Where the deputy is by statute made an employee of the county, he may maintain an action against the county for services rendered, if he complies with the statute relating to the allowance of claims by county commissioners;⁴¹ but the county is liable to him only where made so by statute.⁴² It has been held that a deputy or assistant may not hold the clerk personally liable for payment of his compensation,⁴³ nor recover from the successor of the clerk under whom he served for unpaid compensation even if the successor is obligated to collect the unpaid fees of his predecessor from which the unpaid portion of the suing deputy's compensation would be met.⁴⁴ In some jurisdictions the deputy may sue on the clerk's bond to recover his salary;⁴⁵ but a deputy clerk suing to compel payment of his salary as such must show his appointment to that position.⁴⁶ Recovery may not be had under a statute which is inapplicable.⁴⁷ or assistant clerk of court may embrace the ministerial functions of the clerk, although ordinarily any judicial functions of the clerk are beyond the power of the deputy.

A deputy clerk of court ordinarily has powers coextensive with those of his principal,⁴⁸ and the courts have upheld the validity of statutes authorizing the appointment of assistant clerks of court and their performance of the duties and functions of the clerk,⁴⁹ although under other statutory provisions a deputy clerk is not authorized to act generally for his principal.⁵⁰ The clerk may promulgate reasonable rules and regulations with respect to his assistants.⁵¹

Ministerial acts. In the absence of any statutory provision or implication to the contrary, a deputy clerk is authorized to perform any official⁵² ministerial act⁵³ that may be done by his principal, except to appoint a deputy;⁵⁴ and his action in the premises is just as regular and binding as if performed by his principal.⁵⁵ It has even been held that the deputy may not be restricted in the exercise of those functions which he is otherwise qualified to perform.⁵⁶

Particular ministerial functions of a deputy or assistant clerk of court include the making of certificates,⁵⁷ the issuance and testing of writs,⁵⁸ and the ordering of the seizure of personalty in an action of claim and delivery.⁵⁹ The power and duty of such a deputy or assistant to perform sundry other particular acts is considered in specific titles such as Acknowledgments § 48, Affidavits § 10, Appeal and Error § 556, Arbitration and Award § 42, Attachment § 158, the C.J.S. title Costs § 274, also 11 C.J. p 914 note 21, 15 C.J. p 176 note 36 [a], the C.J.S. title Depositions § 42, also 11 C.J. p 914 note 26, 18 C.J. p 647 note 13, the C.J.S. title Grand Juries §§ 9 and 10, also 11 C.J. p 914 notes 27, 28, 28 C.J. p 776 notes 72, 73, 74 [b], and the C.J.S. title Oaths and Affirmations § 5, also 11 C.J. p 913 note 18.

By statute in some jurisdictions a deputy clerk is given express authority to perform the duties of his principal in case of the absence or disability of the latter,⁶⁰ but it has been held that such a statute does not deprive the deputy of power to act when his principal is not absent or disabled.⁶¹ Where duties not necessarily belonging to his office as clerk are imposed on the clerk by statute, it seems that they may not be performed by his deputy.⁶²

Entering judgment. The fact that a judgment is entered up by a deputy clerk, and not by the clerk in person, does not affect its validity.⁶³

Practice of law. Statutory provisions have been held to preclude a deputy or an assistant clerk from practicing law in the court of which he is clerk,⁶⁴ but, at least in some jurisdictions, do not preclude him from practicing in other courts.⁶⁵

Judicial functions. Judicial powers vested in the clerk cannot be exercised by a deputy in the absence of express statutory authority.⁶⁶

b. In Whose Name Deputy Should Act

Where a deputy is regarded as a mere agent of the clerk of court he may and should perform official acts in the name of the clerk, although where the deputy is regarded as an officer in his own right, or where statute changes the rule, he may act in his own name as deputy.

Where the deputy clerk is recognized as an officer distinct from the clerk, it is held that he may properly perform his official duties in his own name,⁶⁷ but where the deputy is regarded as merely the agent or servant of his principal he must act in the name of the principal,⁶⁸ and he may use his principal's name in performing acts which the principal is authorized to perform.⁶⁹ Under code provisions to the effect that any duty enjoined on, or permitted to be done by, a ministerial officer may be performed by his deputy, an official act of a deputy clerk of court will not be rendered void by his signing his name as deputy without the name of his principal.⁷⁰ In some jurisdictions, a jurat may be signed by a deputy clerk of court, either in his own name, as deputy, or in the name of his principal, by himself as deputy.⁷¹

c. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In the absence of countervailing circumstances there is a presumption in favor of a deputy clerk's authority to act, and the burden of showing the contrary rests on the party seeking to annul the act.

In accordance with the maxim, Omnia præsuntur rite solemniter esse acta, it will be presumed that the circumstances were such as authorized the deputy to act, in the absence of anything to show the contrary;⁷² and the burden of showing that the circumstances were not such as to authorize the deputy to act is on the party seeking to annul the act.⁷³

§ 91. Civil Liability

A deputy clerk and his surety may be held liable for defaults of the deputy. Some authorities permit third persons to recover against a deputy clerk of court for acts of misfeasance although denying recovery for mere nonfeasance.

Where the default of the deputy is one for which the clerk is liable, as considered in § 48, the deputy is liable over to his principal,⁷⁴ and if the act is one of misfeasance or malfeasance, he is also personally liable to third persons;⁷⁵ but no action will lie against a deputy clerk, by third persons, for mere nonfeasance or neglect of official duty.⁷⁶

A deputy and his clerk may not be held responsible for damages to private persons, caused by the deputy's neglect, under a statute having no relation to private persons.⁷⁷

Surety's liabilities and remedies. In some jurisdictions, the sureties on the clerk's official bond are liable for the misconduct of his deputy.⁷⁸

Where no statute requires a bond of a deputy clerk of court, but the clerk, being responsible for the acts of his deputy, takes a bond of the deputy for his own protection, this is not an official bond in the strict sense of the term but is valid as a common-law bond, the clerk individually, and not the public, being the obligee in interest thereunder. Where the conduct of the clerk has precluded any recovery on the deputy's bond by such clerk personally, his trustees in bankruptcy stand in no better position and they may not recover on the theory that the bond was given for protection of the public; nor does the fact that the bond ran in the name of the clerk as clerk make it one for protection of the public so as to permit suit by the clerk's trustees in bankruptcy.⁷⁹

The surety on the bond of a deputy clerk to the clerk of court cannot rise any higher than his principal in right and must take his remedies with all the equities and limitations in the premises, and where the surety on the deputy's bond is also surety on the clerk's bond, he is liable for moneys misappropriated by the deputy without the right to any offset as against the deputy. The deputy's surety may be held liable on a continuation certificate which is in effect a new bond.⁸⁰

Proceedings to enforce liability. A cause of action by the clerk over against his deputy, for the negligence or unskillful performance of his duty by the latter, whereby his principal is exposed to a suit for damages, accrues at the time the act complained of is committed, and not merely when the consequent injury is developed.⁸¹ The clerk, in an action against him, cannot set up in his defense the invalidity of his deputy's appointment,⁸² although he may show that the alleged damage resulted from an honest error of judgment on the deputy's part.⁸³

§ 92. Criminal Responsibility

Under statute deputy clerks of court may be held criminally responsible for falsification of dockets or accounts.

A comprehensive statute making it a misdemeanor for any officer required to keep a court docket or to keep an account of fees or fines, and to pay over the same, to falsify such docket or account, is applicable to a deputy clerk of court.⁸⁴

CLINKERS. Stony matter vitrified or fused from impurities in burning coal.¹³

CLYPEUS or CLYPEUS. In old English law, a shield; metaphorically one of a noble family.¹⁴

CLIP HOOKS. A type of hook used for vessel rigging and defined as two regular shaped iron hooks having one side flat, suspended (reversed to one another) from a small iron thimble. By overlapping, these two shapes form one complete inclosing hook. These are also known as "sister hooks;"¹⁵ and are then defined as a pair of hooks so mounted that they face and overlap each other; match hooks.¹⁶

CLITO. In Saxon law, the son of a king or emperor, hence the next heir to the throne; the Saxon adeling.¹⁷

CLOSE

As a Noun

In common acceptation the term means an inclosed field;¹⁹ but in law, it is a purely technical term to indicate the interest of a party in land,²⁰ whether inclosed or not,²¹ being distinguished from "inclosure."²²

In another sense the word means termination, or winding up.²³

As a Verb

—Present Tense. To finish, terminate, complete, wind up,²⁸ as to "close" an account, a bargain, an estate, or public books, such as tax books.²⁹ Also to shut up, so as to prevent entrance or access by any person, as in statutes requiring saloons to be "closed" at certain times, which further implies an entire suspension of business;³⁰ to vacate or obstruct, when applied to streets and roads.³¹

Phrases: "Close its business of banking,"³² "close the deal,"³³ "close the same,"³⁴ and "permit to close a street to travel."³⁵

As an Adjective

In its general sense, the term has been defined in Corpus Juris, as meaning closed to keep out something, fast shut, or pent up.⁶²

In practice, closed or sealed up, the term being applied to writs and letters, to distinguish them from those that are open or patent.⁶³

In a different sense, the adjective has been defined as meaning near,⁶⁴ and the term has been held synonymous with "adjacent."⁶⁵

Close corporation. In the vernacular, a corporation in which the stock is held in a few hands or in a few families, and is not at all, or only rarely, dealt in by buying and selling; and in the law of England, a corporation in which the directors and officers have the power to fill vacancies in their own number, without allowing to the general body of stockholders any choice or vote in their election.⁶⁶

§ 1. Definition and Kinds

A club is a voluntary association of persons for purposes of a social, literary, or political nature, or the like.

While the word "club" has no very definite meaning, it may be defined generally as a voluntary association of persons for purposes of a social, literary, or political nature, or the like.¹ A club is a definite association organized for an indefinite ex-

Other definitions

(1) "An association of persons for the promotion of some common object, as literature, science, politics, good fellowship."—Boyden v. Roberts, 111 N.W. 701, 131 Wis. 659, 672, quoting Webster D.

(2) Further definitions see 11 C.J. p 922 note 1.

Association held a club

Where persons in large numbers deposit with a proprietor of a restaurant their individual liquor and such proprietor holds himself out as ready to receive such liquor and dispense it to such patrons for pay for such service, furnishing glassware, ice, milk, etc., for making such liquors palatable; and such persons frequently by day and night resort to such place, engage in discussing current events, politics, etc., and have the intoxicating liquors served to them, although each person is served only his own liquor, it is a club.—Van Pelt v. Hilliard, 78 So. 693, 75 Fla. 792, L.R.A.1918E 639.

Social club

(1) An association organized, as shown by its certificate of incorporation, for social fellowship, with the privilege of providing for its members refreshment, etc., is a social istence; not an ephemeral meeting for a particular occasion, to be lost in a crowd at its dissolution.²

There are various kinds of clubs. An unincorporated members' club is a society of persons each of whom contributes to the funds out of which the expenses of conducting the society are paid.³ An unincorporated proprietary club is one whose property and funds belong to a proprietor who usually conducts it with a view to profit; the members, in consideration of the payment by them to the proprietor of entrance fees and subscriptions, are entitled to make such use of the premises and property, and to exercise such other rights and privileges, as the contract between them and the proprietor justifies.⁴

Beneficial associations generally are considered in the title Beneficial Associations §§ 1-86. Employees' relief and benefit associations are discussed in the C.J.S. title Master and Servant §§ 167-170, also 39 C.J. p 247 note 65-p 259 note 26. Unincorporated associations generally are considered in the title Associations §§ 1-39.

§ 2. Nature and Status

Voluntary clubs are not partnerships, although a proprietary club may be conducted by either an individual, a partnership, a voluntary association, or a corporation.

A proprietary club may in its nature be conducted by either an individual, a partnership, a voluntary association, or a corporation.⁵ Organizations ordinarily referred to as clubs are usually members' clubs, and may be either incorporated⁶ or voluntary⁷ associations. Voluntary clubs are not partnerships, because the members are not associated with a view to profit,⁸ and the members do not hold the relation of principal and agent the one to the other.⁹ Where, however, the members of a club associate themselves together for the purpose of a commercial venture, such association constitutes a partnership.¹⁰

§ 3. Statutory Provisions

Clubs are subject to statutory regulation under the police power of the state.

Since the police power of the state includes the regulation and supervision of amusements and places of amusements, as they have a tendency to become harmful, the mere fact that the objects of a club are lawful within themselves does not place its conduct in providing amusements and maintaining places for its members to enjoy amusements beyond the police power of the state.¹¹ A statute authorizing the secretary of state to revoke the charter of a club used for gambling or other unlawful acts has been held to be valid.¹²

§ 4. Incorporation and Organization

The general rules as to the organization of associations govern the organization of an unincorporated club. There must be a compliance with statutory requirements in the incorporation of a club.

Clubs may be incorporated or unincorporated, in which latter event the rules of law applicable to associations, as discussed in the title Associations § 3, in general apply. Accordingly, the organization of unincorporated clubs, unlike that of corporations, usually does not depend on statutory provisions, but, as to its manner and effect, is within the discretion of the associators.¹³

In many states statutes exist which provide for the incorporation of clubs, and in order for a club to incorporate, there must be a compliance with the

statutory requirements. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the lack of necessity for a charter for a purely social club is no reason for refusing it a charter.¹⁴ It has been held that a charter should not be refused because the name of the club is possibly offensive to canons of good taste,¹⁵ or because it is a foreign one;¹⁶ but it has also been held that the charter should be denied where the name proposed for the club is not appropriate and is undignified.¹⁷

Where the statute so requires, the application for incorporation must state the purposes of the club with sufficient definiteness to enable the court to determine whether or not the object falls within the purview of the law,¹⁸ and state a satisfactory manner in which club revenues are to be provided,¹⁹ and a satisfactory basis on which membership may be acquired.²⁰ The certificate of incorporation should provide for capital or pecuniary means, declare an object such as is indicated by the statute, and designate an office or place of business.²¹ It is not necessary, however, that a charter giving the power to make by-laws should contain a provision against the adoption of by-laws which would be contrary to law.²² An application for a charter will be denied where the proposed by-laws provide for an illegal method of management of the club.²³

A social club with power to dispense liquors to its members cannot be organized under a statute providing for the formation of benevolent, religious, scientific, educational, and miscellaneous associations, or any association which tends to the public advantage in relation to any or several of the objects above enumerated, and whatever is incident to such objects.²⁴

Under a statute requiring judicial approval of a certificate of incorporation, an application for such approval is addressed to the judge's discretion, which ought to be exercised cautiously and on conservative principles.²⁵ Where a club is organized under statutory authority, it being the duty of courts to see that such statute is obeyed, any infractions of it are matters of judicial cognizance.²⁶

In case of the incorporation of a preëxisting club, the corporation generally succeeds to its property.²⁷

Sale of memberships. Where the contracts for a sale of memberships in a club, such as a golf club, specify no limitation of time within which the proposed membership list is to be completed, or improvements to be made on the club grounds, the law affords a reasonable time therefor, and what constitutes a reasonable time depends on the facts of the particular case.²⁸ On failure of the promoter to

An application for a charter, part of which, including the name of the incorporation, is in a foreign language, which does not set forth how the object of the association is to be accomplished and how its membership is to be perpetuated, will be refused.—In re Societa Italiana di Mutui Soccorso de Benefeienza of Bristol, 24 Pa.Co. 84.

"Social enjoyment"

In setting forth the purposes of the club, the term "social enjoyment" is too indefinite. The articles of association should go farther and set out with particularity the nature and character of the social enjoyment proposed to be furnished for the members of the club, and how they are to be conducted, so that the court, after examination of the articles, can without hesitation certify that the purposes are lawful and not injurious to the public.—In re Hampton Booster Club, 29 Pa.Dist. 934.—In re Monroe Republican Club, 19 Pa.Co. 568, 6 Pa.Dist. 515, 45 Pa.L.J. 52—11 C.J. p 922 note 17 [b] (2).

complete the proposed membership list, persons who have purchased memberships in reliance on his agreement may recover from the promoter their damages resulting from such failure.²⁹

§ 5. — Purpose and Object

The purpose and object of the club must be lawful and for the best interests of the community.

Whether incorporated or unincorporated, the purpose and object of a club must, of course, be lawful.³⁰ Statutes permitting the incorporation of clubs usually require not only that their purposes be lawful, but that they shall have as well a worthy and commendable object, and a charter should be denied where it may be readily seen that the proposed assemblages will not be conducive to the welfare of the members or of the community at large.³¹ Accordingly, clubs for the purpose of cultivating foreign nationalism, which might result to the detriment of American interests,³² or a purely political club with no capital or property,³³ or a labor union without capital or property,³⁴ or a club whose purpose is to sell intoxicating liquors without a license,³⁵ have been refused incorporation. On the other hand, it is no objection to the application for incorporation that the name is indicative of political belief or affiliation if the real purpose is legitimate;³⁶ and a social club may be formed for the purpose of purchasing and maintaining a driving park and clubhouse with the object of improving horses in speed, style, action, and blood.³⁷

§ 6. Registration

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 7. Constitution, By-Laws, and Rules

The constitution and by-laws of a club constitute a contract binding both it and the members. By-laws may be adopted, amended, or repealed only in accordance with the provision, if any, in the by-laws therefor.

In case a club is incorporated, its rights and powers, and duties and liabilities are governed by its charter, the same as other corporations. Accordingly, a constitution adopted by a membership corporation after its organization, not in conformity with its charter or certificate of incorporation, is invalid.³⁸

If a club adopts a constitution and by-laws they constitute a contract between the club and its members, binding on both,³⁹ whether the club is incorporated⁴⁰ or not;⁴¹ and every member of the club

Refusal warranted

Application for a charter for a social club will be denied, where it appears that its proposed location is on the first floor of the home of the principal officers, that the club assets are very small, that the standard of membership is only that the proposed member be introduced by a member, and where it is evident that the club hopes to live off the dances, boxing matches, and other similar activities to be held in the clubroom, particularly where the club may sell liquor.—In re Charter for Club, 22 Pa.Dist. & Co. 669.

is presumed to be acquainted with its rules.⁴² The laws so adopted by the club must, of course, be lawful in order to be binding.⁴³

A by-law of a club can be adopted only on compliance with the provision, if any, in the by-laws therefor,⁴⁴ and by-laws, which are the permanent and continuing rules of government, can be amended or repealed only in the manner prescribed by the by-laws.⁴⁵ Ordinarily, whether any given rule of action becomes a by-law or is a mere resolution depends on the solemnity with which it is passed,⁴⁶ and a resolution offered and adopted without previous notice, on mere motion by majority vote, cannot have the effect of impairing the binding force of a valid existing by-law.⁴⁷

§ 8. Rights and Powers

The rights and powers of a club are ordinarily governed by the controlling statutes and its charter, constitution, and by-laws.

The rights and powers of a club, subject, of course, to such limitations as may exist either at common law or by statute, are governed primarily by its charter, constitution, and by-laws.⁴⁸ A club, even though unincorporated, particularly where it is organized to promote some purpose beneficial to the general public or of certain classes thereof, are generally held to have the power to acquire and convey real property,⁴⁹ and to occupy and hold property as a tenant.⁵⁰ A club also has power, under a statute authorizing it to hold real and personal estate, and to provide suitable buildings for its accommodation, to borrow money for such purposes;⁵¹ and it may enforce a trust created for its benefit.⁵² A bona fide social club, if permitted by its articles of incorporation or association, may engage in business by transactions with either its members or members of the public.⁵³ However, a club cannot issue stock on which the votes of members shall be based.⁵⁴

Immunity from public interference. The public authorities have no right to interfere with the festivities of a private club organized for a legitimate purpose and conducted in a manner not amounting to a nuisance or breach of the peace; but a social club cannot complain of the surveillance of the police where it gives a public ball and sells wines and liquors to all persons willing to pay for them.⁵⁵

§ 9. — Racing Associations

The rights and powers of a racing association are governed by the controlling statutes, its charter, constitution, and by-laws.

A corporation organized under a statute, providing for the incorporation of associations for improving the breed of horses, etc., acquires its only right to conduct races for a stake or reward by virtue of a license issued by the racing commission created by the act; and, as such license must contain a condition that all running races and running race meetings shall be subject to the reasonable rules and regulations of the jockey club, such a corporation and its patrons are as much subject to such rules and regulations as if the same were a part of the act authorizing the issuing of the license; and hence patrons of the races conducted by such an association subject themselves to such rules, and to the liabilities and penalties prescribed thereby.⁵⁶ A rule adopted by the jockey club, under the provisions of such a statute requiring the exclusion from race meetings of a person ruled off the turf for improper practices, is not an illegal restriction on the franchise enjoyed by a racing association incorporated under the act, nor on the rights of the public in such franchise; and it invades the right of no person not a member of such an association, violates no contract, takes away no property or vested right, and is not illegal;⁵⁷ and the penalty which may be inflicted under the rule is not limited to the

The executive committee appointed under the rules of a jockey club to settle disputed points that may arise are the final arbiters in regard to the rights of horses to enter any of the club's races, and the decision of such committee will not be disturbed by the courts except for plain abuse of power.⁵⁹

Free passes. In the absence of a statute or provision in its charter to the contrary, a racing association has the right to issue free passes, particularly in an effort to obtain favorable publicity in the newspapers.⁶⁰

§ 10. Liabilities

A club may be liable either in contract or tort for the acts of its agents acting within the scope of their employment.

A club is liable on contracts made in its behalf by its duly authorized agents.⁶¹ However, one dealing with a membership corporation is bound to know of its strictly limited powers and sharply defined methods of procedure.⁶²

An unincorporated club is not liable for the debts of a member, nor are club funds liable therefor, unless the share of such funds belonging to such member is shown.⁶³

Torts. An incorporated club, conducting club houses, and sustained by membership dues, is liable to its members for negligence;⁶⁴ and a club may be held liable for a tort committed by its members or guests while engaged in the sport for which it was organized.⁶⁵ A club, particularly where its organization is such as to constitute its members partners, may be liable for any negligence on the part of its agents in the performance of their duties.⁶⁶ A club, maintaining a clubhouse, owes a duty to its paying guests to use reasonable care that the premises as a whole, and the rooms assigned to the use of the guest in particular, should be reasonably fit and safe for the use intended.⁶⁷ It is also the club's duty to take fair and reasonable precautions that the guest is informed and warned against all dangers incident to the enjoyment of the club privileges, which are not obvious to the senses of an ordinarily intelligent person.⁶⁸ As to invitees on club property, the club owes them the duty to exercise ordinary care to prevent their injury.⁶⁹

A club is not liable to a person not a member for excluding him from membership where he shows no right to become such, even though certain officers and employees, acting entirely beyond their functions, individually deceived him into believing that he was a member.⁷⁰

§ 11. Officers, Agents, and Committees

See infra §§ 12-14.

§ 12. — Appointment or Election

The appointment or election of an officer of a club should be in accordance with any statutory requirement therefor and with the provisions therefor in the club by-laws.

In order for an officer to be validly elected to office in a club, there must be a compliance with statutory requirements therefor, if any, and with the by-laws of the club.⁷¹ If the election of an officer is illegal, a court of equity may restrain him from acting as such.⁷² It has been held, however, if the proceeding involves merely the question of title to office in a club, that equity has no jurisdiction,⁷³ the remedy of quo warranto, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Quo Warranto §§ 7, 9, also 51 C.J. p 315 note 2, p 318 note 39, being available.

Nomination. A by-law, providing that nominations from the floor shall always be in order, authorizes nominations from the floor until the election of officers is in fact held.⁷⁴

§ 13. — Rights and Powers

The rights and duties of the officers of a club are usually based on its charter, constitution or by-laws, usage, and general principles of law.

Generally speaking, the rights and duties of the officers of a club find their basis in the applicable provisions of its charter, constitution or by-laws, usage, and general principles of law, and frequently the question of authority resolves itself into one of fact.⁷⁵ If the act done by an officer is not within the scope of his authority, the club is not of course bound thereby,⁷⁶ in the absence of ratification or estoppel;⁷⁷ and one who seeks to hold the club liable for the act of an officer must show that the officer had authority to do the act.⁷⁸

A power conferred by a club through a meeting of its members on one person to do an act is superior to and supersedes the power to do the same act conferred upon another person by the board of trustees.⁷⁹

Directors or trustees. The restrictions on the powers of the governors of a membership corporation must be strictly construed, where the statute imposes on each director a liability for the debts of a corporation.⁸⁰ Provisions in the constitution of an incorporated club authorizing its board of trustees to "have the control and management of its property, funds and affairs," and "determine all matters affecting the welfare of the club," and to "authorize and control all the expenditures," do not confer authority on such board to acquire real estate for club premises, or to authorize a committee so to do.⁸¹ Powers vested in the directors of an incorporated club to secure the payment of the debts of the club out of its fund are not nullified by the fact that in certain contingencies the directors may be personally liable for the debts or some of them.⁸²

President. The president of an incorporated club has been held to have presumptive authority to act in the ordinary business of the club.⁸³

House committees. In the absence of any restrictions on the powers of the house committee, one who has duly leased the clubhouse from the officers thereof for the purpose of maintaining a restaurant for the exclusive use of the members and their guests may recover for refreshments furnished to guests of the club at the request of members of the house committee.⁸⁴

Execution of powers. Under a statute prohibiting the making of leases by a membership corporation, unless authorized by two thirds of the directors, where there are nine members of a board of governors, six must concur in authorizing the signing of a lease;⁸⁵ and under a by-law of a social corporation providing that an assessment could be made by a majority of the executive committee which consisted of twenty members, five of which constituted a quorum, by a "majority of the committee" was meant a majority of the whole committee, and not a majority of the quorum of five.⁸⁶

An officer or agent of an incorporated club is not liable on contracts entered into by him in behalf of the club where it is clear that he is acting in his official capacity; but the rule is otherwise as to officers or agents of unincorporated clubs. An officer or agent may be held liable for secret profits made by him while acting in a fiduciary capacity for the club.

Where there is no question of the legal entity of the club, an officer is not liable on contracts made by him for the club, at least where it is clear that he was acting as the club's agent and did not intend to bind himself personally.⁸⁷ On the other hand, an officer who acts for an unincorporated club in signing an instrument in its behalf is personally liable thereon;⁸⁸ although, in the absence of any intervening rights of third persons, it has also been held that an officer of an unincorporated association is not liable on an instrument signed by him in his official capacity when he was assured by all concerned that no personal liability would attach there-to.⁸⁹

Under some statutes the trustees of an incorporated club are liable for the debts of the club contracted while the trustees are in office.⁹⁰ Under such a statute, the president of an incorporated club, if he is not also a trustee, is not individually liable although the debt is incurred by him as president.⁹¹ A creditor need not first exhaust his remedy against the club before proceeding against the trustees under this statute;⁹² and the fact that the creditor has brought an action to enforce a mechanic's lien against the club does not affect his right to enforce a claim against the trustees under their statutory liability.⁹³

An officer or a member of the club who acts in a fiduciary capacity for the club, such as a purchasing agent, will be liable to the club for secret profits made by him on transactions with the club.⁹⁴ A person alleging fraud and collusion on the part of the directors of an incorporated club has the burden to establish such allegations.⁹⁵ A member of an incorporated social club must make a strong showing of mismanagement of its affairs by the board of directors, of which he had knowledge and made no complaint, before he can be heard to say that such mismanagement has resulted to his injury;⁹⁶ and the member is charged with knowledge profits made, stockholders not being represented.—Dixmoor Golf Club v. Evans, supra.

95. Validity of claim

Finding of creditors' committee that certain claimant had valid claim against golf corporation for material furnished to one of promoters and actually used in improving property, and that claimant was entitled to stock in corporation to amount of claim, was held to be sustained by evidence.—Henderson v. Jacobs, 27 P. 2d 378, 219 Cal. 477.

Evidence sustained finding that director's purchase of corporation's property at execution sale was not part of fraudulent conspiracy to purchase property for benefit of other directors and to relieve them from liability on notes to damage of other stockholders and in violation of statute.—Henderson v. Jacobs, supra.

of the expenditure of the club's income and profits, and with the management of its affairs by the directors.⁹⁷ The treasurer of a committee of a society which has two factions, who collects money in his official capacity and pays it over to the treasurer elected by the faction which was in the wrong, is not liable for conversion.⁹⁸

§ 15. Membership Generally

See infra §§ 16, 17.

§ 16. — Admission to

Election to membership by the members of the club is usually prerequisite to membership in a social club.

In the ordinary social club persons applying for membership are required to have a certain standard of social standing and moral character and are voted in by the unanimous vote, or by the vote of a fixed majority of all the members voting on the applications of candidates.⁹⁹ A member of a club, who received notice of its incorporation and continued for three years thereafter to pay dues, is a member of the corporation and liable for dues.¹ The purchaser of a share in a proprietary club is not necessarily entitled to membership, as, under the by-laws of the club, his election may be a prerequisite to his enjoyment of its privileges or to any rights as a shareholder.²

§ 17. — Termination and Reinstatement

- a. By act or omission of member
- b. By act of club
- c. Judicial prevention of expulsion

a. By Act or Omission of Member

On compliance with reasonable club regulations in regard thereto, a member may resign from a club.

In the absence of any rules to the contrary, a member of a club who has paid his subscription for the current year, and who is in no other arrears to his fellow members, may resign his membership at any time by communicating such intention to the society; and ordinarily it is not necessary that the resignation shall be accepted by the club.³ A club, however, may impose reasonable restrictions on a member's right to resign,⁴ and to entitle a member to resign, so as to relieve himself from further liability as such, he must comply with such provisions as may be contained in the by-laws relating to resignation.⁵ Accordingly, if the by-laws of the club permit a member to resign only when he has paid up all dues, an attempted resignation of a member who owes dues is not effectual;⁶ and if the resignation is not received by the officer of the club designated by the by-laws to receive it, its receipt by a clerk in the club's offices does not render it effective.⁷ On the other hand, club by-laws that no resignation shall be effective until accepted by the club directors and a transfer of the certificate of membership made on the club books,⁸ or a by-law that the assignment of a new candidate for membership is necessary before a resignation will be accepted,⁹ have been held to be invalid as unreasonable and arbitrary. A provision that a member shall be dropped from the roll by the board of governors of the club, when in arrears for a specified length of time, is not self-executing, and does not terminate the membership without action on the part of the governors;¹⁰ and a member cannot, by failure to pay dues, terminate his membership so as to avoid further liability, although the club might have terminated it.¹¹

Restoration to membership. Where a member of a membership corporation tenders his resignation, he at once ceases to be a member, and is not entitled to be restored to membership, although he attempts to withdraw the resignation before it is accepted.¹²

A member of a club may be expelled from membership for sufficient cause, and the procedure therefor should be in accordance with the by-laws and rules of the club.

Since, as already discussed in § 7, the constitution and by-laws of a club constitute a contract between it and its members, a member, as one of the incidents of membership, consents to accept liability to expulsion, ordered in accordance with the club's regulations;¹³ and in case the rules provide that the board of trustees may expel a member for conduct, prejudicial to the welfare of the club, the trustees, when charges are filed, have the right, and it is their duty, to proceed to the trial of the charges.¹⁴ The power of expulsion is also sometimes conferred by statute.¹⁵ On the other hand, if the offense with which the member of an incorporated club is charged is not grave enough to constitute grounds for expulsion by a corporate body at common law,¹⁶ it is necessary that authority for his expulsion shall be expressed by some provision of the charter.¹⁷

Grounds. A member of a club cannot be expelled arbitrarily and on insufficient grounds.¹⁸ A cause sufficient to justify the expulsion of a member of a club which has power to expel members for cause is conduct which in some way, or to some degree, tends to injure the club materially or in reputation, or which is contrary to, and destructive of, the purpose of its organization.¹⁹

The power to prescribe grounds for expulsion is given sometimes by statute, and usually by the charter of incorporation or by the constitution of the club.²⁰ When the power to expel is given by charter, the by-laws may properly prescribe the causes for expulsion,²¹ provided, however, that the grounds prescribed are reasonable and not in violation of law.²²

Procedure in general. Where the power to expel is given by charter, the by-laws may properly prescribe, not only the causes for expulsion, but also the mode of procedure.²³ In exercising the right of expulsion, it is essential that the conditions and mode of procedure, as prescribed by statute, or by the charter, constitution, or by-laws of the club, be strictly observed.²⁴

A written notice to each member of the board of trustees of a club being required in a call of a special meeting, the board had no jurisdiction to expel a member at a special meeting, if one of the trustees had not received written notice and was not present, although only a two-thirds vote of the trustees present was required for such purpose.²⁵ Where the meeting of the members of a membership corporation is not called by a quorum of seven of them, and on notice, as required by its by-laws, it is not a meeting of the corporation, and a suspension of a member at such a meeting is invalid.²⁶ Where it is provided that a member may be expelled by a two-thirds vote of the governing committee, and that a majority of the committee shall constitute a quorum, a two-thirds vote of a quorum, there being vacancies in the committee at the time when the vote is taken, is insufficient.²⁷

A member who files charges as prosecutor against another member cannot act as a judge or vote on any issue as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.²⁸ The manner of appointing the in-

Matters held grounds for expulsion

(1) Under a provision in the constitution of the club that a member found guilty of conduct injurious to the good order, peace, or interest of the association might be expelled, to make a charge against the governing committee that one of its members misappropriated club property, unless it was true or appeared to be true, warrants expulsion.—Richards v. investigating committee is generally regulated by the rules of the club.²⁹

An accused member is entitled to a trial of the charges against him.³⁰ In the absence of a statute or by-law of the club to the contrary, however, an accused member is not entitled to be represented by counsel at the hearing.³¹

Notice to member. While it has been held that no notice to an accused member need be given, in the absence of a special requirement therefor,³² the giving of notice is generally required so that the member may have an opportunity to defend;³³ and if notice is not given, the accused is under no obligation to ask for a hearing.³⁴ It has been held, in the absence of any agreement or provisions to the contrary, that the required notice must be personal.³⁵

A wrongful expulsion must affect a member's property right before a court will interfere therewith, and, where the expulsion was in accordance with the club's by-laws, the decision of the organization and its officers, if made in good faith, is final.

As the foundation for the jurisdiction which a court exercises to prevent an improper expulsion of a club member rests on the principle that the member may thereby be deprived of his right of property, no judicial restraint will be accorded in the absence of such property interest.³⁶ Where the rules of a club provide the manner of expelling a member, the court will not enjoin it from thus proceeding, in the absence of prejudice or malice.³⁷ Also, where the expulsion was in accordance with the rules of the club, the decision of the organization and its officers acting in good faith is final, and there is no general appeal to the courts.³⁸ A member who has submitted his cause to a tribunal set up for such purposes by the club is in no position to challenge in the courts the jurisdiction of that tribunal.³⁹ On the other hand, if the expulsion was illegal, a court of equity will reinstate the member,⁴⁰ if all remedies open to him in the club itself have been exhausted.⁴¹ The proceedings, however, are presumed to be regular⁴² and the decision fair;⁴³ and where the rules provide that the proceedings of the trial committee shall be strictly private, a member of the committee cannot, in an action for reinstatement, be interrogated as to his reasons for his vote, or as to what he deemed proper and sufficient ground for the expulsion of a member.⁴⁴

§ 18. Rights and Powers of Members

A member in a club ordinary has such rights and powers as are granted him by the charter and by-laws of the club.

certain whether the essential formalities required by the constitution and by-laws of the association have been complied with, whether the proceedings have been regular, whether the cause assigned is one sufficient in law to warrant expulsion, whether the member has been given a fair chance to present his side of the controversy so as to satisfy the requirements of natural justice, whether the decision is within the scope of the jurisdiction and whether it has been reached in good faith, and whether the action appears to have been within an exercise of sound reason or to have been capricious, arbitrary and irrational."—Richards v. Morison, supra.

Expulsion held proper

Where a member of athletic club charged that one of governing board of club had misappropriated club property, whereupon governing board expelled such member, it was held that governing board was not disqualified from acting because it felt aggrieved by member's conduct; that it was not malice or bad faith in such board to act promptly, without waiting for usual formalities, their act otherwise being proper; that fact that board secured attorney's advice as to procedure to be followed was not evidence of bad faith or malice; that fact that slanders about such member were in circulation and came to attention of board while considering his expulsion was not evidence of bad faith; that it was duty of member, upon being granted hearing by board to justify before board what he had said; and that evidence, in action for damages for such expulsion, did not justify inference that board exceeded its constitutional powers, or that it was actuated by bad faith or malice.—*Richards v. Generally, a member of a social club, during his life, is considered as a part owner of its property, not a creditor,⁴⁵ but since, as already indicated in § 2, an association organized merely for social, literary, scientific, or political purposes, although not incorporated, is not a partnership, the members have no individual rights in the club property, and own no proportionate share thereof, but have only the right to its joint use so long as they remain members,⁴⁶ and none less than the whole number can dispose of it or any interest therein.⁴⁷ As otherwise stated, membership in a social club entitles the member to certain social opportunities and enjoyments, and affords him an interest, although not a transmissible interest, in the club property.⁴⁸

The rights of members in the property of an incorporated club are defined in the law of the state and in the charter, constitution, and by-laws of the corporation.⁴⁹ Ordinarily, such stockholders are not tenants in common of the club property.⁵⁰ A member of a club organized as a nonprofit corporation, whose membership is terminated, has no right or interest in the property of the corporation except such as is given him by the articles and regulations of the corporation.⁵¹ Special contracts between a club and its members concerning corporate property may be made for club purposes and will be given effect.⁵² Accordingly, where the by-laws provide that a member's right to corporate property ends with his death, as such by-law constitutes a contract between the club and member, see supra § 7, such contract may be enforced.⁵³ On the other hand, where the contract between the club and member provides that the club is to repay the amount paid for a life membership on the member's death, such contract is also enforceable.⁵⁴

Where the members of a membership corporation are illegally excluded from meetings of the club, they may sue the members in possession to enjoin them, and to compel such administration of the affairs of the corporation as will prevent a diversion of its assets to any purposes other than those pro-

Not property

Club membership is not property in broad sense.—Genslinger v. New Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, 171 N.E. 514, 339 Ill. 426, reversing 252 Ill.App. 298, transferred 163 N.E. 707, 332 Ill. 316.

Assessment asset of corporation

Where articles of incorporated thrift club specifically authorized assessments of sixty dollars per year on each share, provided that assessments should be "held by the corporation in trust for the stockholders", such assessments nevertheless became assets of corporation, since to construe articles otherwise would be to hold that corporation had organized and engaged in business as trust company, in violation of law.—Melville v. Recovery of initiation fee

The code of regulations of a club, organized as a corporation not for profit, provided that if a member should be expelled for failure to pay dues he should be entitled to the return of the initiation fee paid by him, and also provided that the corporation should have a lien on his membership for unpaid dues. The corporation, in a written notice to a delinquent member, called attention to such lien and to the fact that in his case the lien exceeded the amount paid in by him, and notified him that if he failed to pay by a given date his certificate of membership would be canceled and all of his rights and privileges terminated. Such member failed to pay and ceased to claim privileges as a member, and made no protest or complaint or demand for the return of his initiation fee for a long time thereafter; and the corporation did nothing further to enforce the lien or expel such member. It was held, that such member was not entitled to recover such initiation fee.—Chestnut Beach Ass'n v. May, 184 N.E. 856, 44 Ohio App. 217.

Breach of contract

plaintiff's damage in amount of fee paid. — Ballinger v. City Athletic Club, 165 A. 873, 11 N.J.Misc. 348.

Increased value of property

Where the certificates of membership in a golf club did not require the club to pay any sums of money to the holder of the certificate, no interest in the property of the corporation is conferred by them, and a holder has the rights specified therein, subject to the conditions stated, and nothing more. Accordingly, a club, which issues certificates of membership signifying the payment of a certain sum by the holder of the certificate, does not become accountable for the increased value of the property of the corporation, in the absence of specific provisions in the certificate that the owner shall participate in such increased value.—Rau & Richter v. Torresdale-Frankford Country Club, 87 Pa.Super. 153.

Statement of relationship to club

"He [deceased member] had all the rights of a life member with such member's equal undivided share in all its property; he could have claimed it on dissolution during his lifetime; the club was not holding the member's money; it was paid to the club once for all the consideration specified." — Flaherty v. Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, supra.

vided by the charter of the organization;⁵⁵ and a member of an incorporated club has a standing in equity for the purpose of securing an injunction to restrain the club from carrying out its declared purpose of committing an act which, if found to be criminal, will imperil the charter of the club.⁵⁶

The members of an incorporated club are entitled to inspect the membership roll for a proper purpose;⁵⁷ but, under a provision of a club constitution that action taken by the executive and advisory committees, not affecting the club's finances or property, shall be final, a member is not entitled to access to the membership roll, where such right is denied by the officers and the committees pursuant to a general policy, the member's rights being limited by the agreement under which the club was formed, as shown by the constitution and the by-laws.⁵⁸

Right to resort to courts. Exhaustion of a club member's remedy under its constitution and by-laws is a prerequisite to a judicial enforcement of his personal rights as a member.⁵⁹ A contract between a club and its members providing that in case a member should feel aggrieved by any action taken by the organization, its governors, or any of its committees, either with respect to such member or any of the other members, the member will first file a complaint with the organization or its governors before resorting to the courts for relief, does not prevent a member from resorting to the courts for relief against a fellow member not falling within the classes designated.⁶⁰

Resignation assessment

Club whose articles of incorporation provided that terms and conditions for members' resignation should be prescribed by by-laws was not entitled to recover from resigning members resignation assessment fixed by board of governors, even if club had power to make assessment, where only by-law attempting to set out terms and conditions for resignation provided that resignation should not terminate membership until accepted by board of governors, since by-law merely delegated whole matter to board's uncontrolled discretion. — Lafayette Club v. Wright, Minn., 271 N.W. 702.

Since, as already considered in § 2, membership clubs are not partnerships, a member is not under a partner's duties and liabilities to the club. Accordingly, where a member of an unincorporated club renews in his own name and for his own benefit a lease of ground which the club had held as tenant at sufferance without payment of rent, an action to have the lease claimed by such person impressed with a trust in behalf of an officer of the association, or else to have it adjudged that the member acted as the officer's agent in procuring the lease, will not lie.⁶¹

§ 20. — Dues, Fines, and Assessments

A club has no incidental power to levy assessments on members, and a contract to pay dues and assessments must be founded on a consideration. Where, however, a member is under a binding obligation to pay dues and assessments, his liability therefor continues as long as his membership exists.

An incorporated club has no incidental power to levy assessments on its members and to compel them to pay the same by action at law;⁶² and, there being no statutory authority therefor, a membership corporation cannot levy assessments on the members and exclude them from their rights and privileges as such because of their refusal to pay the same.⁶³ Accordingly, where the laws of the state constituting a part of the charter of an incorporated club give it no power to levy assessments on members, long continued corporate action and acquiescence therein in levying and collecting assessments cannot operate as a practical construction of the charter as giving such power.⁶⁴ However, provisions of articles of association imposing on members the payment of dues and assessments at stated times create a legal obligation by each member to pay the same so long as the society remains a going concern and his membership continues,⁶⁵ the purpose for which an assessment may be levied depending on the terms of the contract between the members.⁶⁶

In order for a member's promise to a club to pay membership fee, dues, and assessments to be enforceable, the promise of the member, like any other contract, must be supported by a consideration;⁶⁷ but ordinarily a membership contract in a club, entitling the member to a proportionate share in club property and to the use thereof the same as all members, does not lack mutuality or consideration.⁶⁸ Such a contract should be construed as any other contract and the words interpreted according to the common, ordinary, and usual meaning.⁶⁹

A member of a club when called on to pay dues and assessments cannot avoid liability therefor by resigning.⁷⁰ On the other hand, a member is not liable for dues accruing after the termination of his membership.⁷¹ A distinction must be drawn, however, between a termination of membership and a suspension of membership; and where the by-laws of the club do not provide that a member shall cease to pay dues on suspension for nonpayment, he may be required to pay dues during the period of suspension.⁷² Also, a member cannot, by failure to pay dues as required by the by-laws, terminate

Authority must be specific

"The authority of an incorporated club to levy assessments on its members must be found in the statute of the state under which it is created or in its charter. This authority cannot be implied, but must be specific, and long-continued corporate action and acquiescence therein by the members in levying and collecting assessments cannot operate as giving such power, under a practical construction of the charter."—*Pendernis Club v. Acts of directors

A person, on joining a club, submits himself to the acts of the directors as the common representatives of all the members. He is not only clothed with all the rights of membership, but is bound by any assessment made by them, unless there is fraud or gross mistake.—Locust Club v. Einstein, 195 A. 432, 129 Pa.Super. 338.

Signer of a "pledge card" issued by an incorporated association pursuant to a "war chest" plan, who thereby enlisted as a member of the local War Chest and agreed to make monthly payments of one dollar for a year, became a member of the corporation, bound by implied knowledge of its certificate and by-laws, and the signer of a contract in fact and in law, and liable, either on the theory of contract to pay dues, or on the theory of an enforceable subscription contract in good faith relied and acted on.—Mechanicville War Chest v. Butterfield, 181 N.Y.S. 428, 110 Misc. 257.

What constitutes payment

Where by-laws of lake resort club provided for active membership by lot owners and associate membership by nonowners, payment of dues by associate member renting lot of active member was not payment of dues of active member.—Lake of the Forest Club v. Buttles, 51 P.2d 18, 142 Kan. 538.

No mutuality

Where a member of a golf club made application for a renewal of his membership and in such application promised to pay dues, which application was accepted by the club, in the absence of evidence of either act, forbearance, or promise on the part of the club as consideration for the promise of the member, it is not enforceable.—Thorpe Bros. v. Woodward, Minn., 256 N.W. 729.

Rescission of contract

(1) Where a member of a club executed a note in payment for a lot on club grounds, payment for the lot constituting membership in the club, on the member's failure to make payment on the note, the club had two remedies; it could forfeit his rights of membership and cancel his right or interest in the lot, or it could allow membership to remain and sue on the note. It could not do both, as the cancellation of membership destroyed the consideration given for the note.—Gulf Coast Shrine Club v. Clarkson, Tex. Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 1048—Park v. Gulf Coast Shrine Club, Tex.Civ. App., 48 S.W.2d 765, error dismissed.

(2) Where club members indorsing club's indebtedness were secured by pledge of notes given by other members for membership rights, rights of such indorsers, as respects such collateral, were subject to conditions recited in collateral notes, including club's right to cancel membership.—Gulf Coast Shrine Club v. Clarkson, supra.

his liability therefor, although the club might have terminated it for that reason.⁷³ A subscriber to the stock of an incorporated club cannot avoid paying assessments pursuant to the terms of his subscription because all the stock had not been subscribed or paid in, where, after knowledge of all the facts, he participated in the purposes of the club, accepted membership tickets and badges without paying a membership fee, and paid annual dues only, and availed himself of the benefit of being a stockholder.⁷⁴ A resignation, in order to relieve the member from liability for subsequent dues, must be made in accordance with the by-laws.⁷⁵ Where the rules provide that when a member has been in arrears for a certain length of time his name shall be dropped from the rolls by the board of governors, his mere delinquency in paying dues does not ipso facto terminate his membership; and, accordingly, where, during the delinquency, he receives notice from the club that unless his account is paid before a time stated he will be dropped without further notice, he is justified in assuming that the expressed intention to drop him has been followed by the proper resolution of the board of governors, and he is not liable to the club for dues subsequently accruing.⁷⁶

Where dues are payable in advance, although the member is given the privilege of paying them in installments,⁷⁷ payment is not excused by the fact that the club becomes insolvent and goes into the hands of a receiver within the period for which the dues are demanded,⁷⁸ and this is so, although the member is deprived of expected benefits.⁷⁹ Also, an applicant for life membership in a club is not relieved from his obligation to pay membership fees specified in his accepted application by the fact that a building project which had induced him to apply for membership has been abandoned by the club; it not being a total failure of consideration for his promise to pay for membership in the club.⁸⁰

No member of a club, as such, becomes liable to pay into the funds of the society, or to anyone else on its account, a greater sum than required by its rules to remain a member.⁸¹ A club, however, organized under a statute providing that the fees and dues of the members shall be established by by-laws which may from time to time be modified has power to increase the annual dues by an amendment of its by-laws,⁸² in the absence of bad faith.⁸³

Assignment. Unpaid dues may be assigned by the club, in which case the assignee may recover the same.⁸⁴

Actions for dues. The mere fact that a club's by-laws, which do not purport to furnish an exclusive remedy, provide that a membership may be forfeited and sold for nonpayment of dues does not preclude an action by the club for delinquent dues.⁸⁵ Where the club forecloses by suit a lien

Securing purchaser

A club member's obligation to pay dues continued until member had in good faith tendered performance of his agreement to offer his stock to club so that if it desired to exercise its option to purchase it might do so and, if it refused to purchase stock, to offer to have stock transferred to a purchaser reasonably satisfactory to governing body of the club.—

Alleged error immaterial

In suit by lake resort club to collect delinquent dues, alleged error in finding that provisions in deeds of lots owned by defendant, whereby conveyances were made subject to by-laws of club, constituted covenants running with land, was immaterial where defendant was not suspended or expelled as member for violation of covenants in her deed.—Lake of the Forest Club v. Buttles, 51 P.2d 18, 142 Kan. 538.

No estoppel

(1) A club was not estopped to recover dues because of treasurer's statements to member that membership would be declared forfeited and sold for nonpayment of dues where no delegation of authority to treasurer to make such statements was shown and letter from board of governors stated that they would accept no resignations.—Lafayette Club v. Roberts, 265 N.W. 802, 196 Minn. 605.

(2) Lake resort club failing promptly to assert claim for dues was not guilty of laches precluding foreclosure of lien against member's held by it for delinquent dues on a member's lot, the member has the usual right of redemption, notwithstanding a provision in the by-laws waiving redemption, where the procedure provided in the by-laws was not followed.⁸⁶

§ 21. Duties and Liabilities of Members to Third Persons

Liability of members of an unincorporated social club must be predicated on the basis of agency, rather than that of partners.

Unless the organization of the club is such as to constitute it a partnership,⁸⁷ which is not ordinarily the case in membership clubs, supra § 2, the liability of its members for debts contracted in behalf of the association is governed not by the principles of partnership, but by those of agency. Membership as such imposes no personal liability for the debts of the club; but to charge a member therefor it must be shown that he has actually or con-which the liability is predicated.⁸⁸ If, however, a member, as such, directly incurs a club debt, or expressly or impliedly authorizes or ratifies the transaction in which it was incurred, he is liable therefor as a principal,⁸⁹ even though the credit was in fact, popularly speaking, extended to the club.⁹⁰ On the other hand, where the local chapter of a national fraternity which was incorporated in a foreign state leased a residence, the lease being signed by the then president and secretary, the fact that the lease was in the name of the fraternity, and that there was a corporation by that name, does not estop the lessor from showing that the local chapter was no more than a voluntary association, and that its members were liable as such.⁹¹ The liability of each member continues so long as he remains such and until he notifies the creditors of his withdrawal from the club.⁹²

In the case of incorporated clubs, the charter may impose personal liability on the members for debts incurred by the club.⁹³

Torts. Unless the organization of the club is such as to constitute its members partners,⁹⁴ liability cannot be fastened on individual members of a club for torts committed by club members or employees, unless the injury resulted from the acts of those sought to be held liable therefor or their agents.

McElin*, supra.

The general rules as to subscription to capital stock and the purchase of stock from corporations, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Corporations § 282 et seq., also 14 C.J. p 507 note 29 et seq., apply to stock subscriptions in incorporated clubs. Accordingly, a subscription to stock in a club "building fund" naming no payee nor showing any purchase of stock in the club itself is unenforceable, at least in the absence of allegations warranting a reformation.⁹⁶ Consideration for stock in an incorporated club may consist in the members' right to the property of another club given therefor.⁹⁷

§ 24. Superior, Inferior, and Affiliated Bodies

A superior lodge may be enjoined from wrongfully withdrawing the charter of a subordinate chapter.

A court of equity will enjoin the grand council of a fraternal college society from wrongfully withdrawing the charter of a subordinate chapter⁹⁸ on insufficient grounds, although no property rights are infringed,⁹⁹ and only one member of the grand council can be reached by the court.¹ Individual members of the chapter may enjoin the unauthorized withdrawal of its charter, although membership would remain to them in spite of the withdrawal.²

§ 25. Consolidation and Merger

The usual rules as to consolidations and mergers of associations and corporations govern mergers of clubs.

Consolidations and mergers of clubs are governed by the usual rules applicable to associations and corporations generally. Accordingly, where a statute designates the kinds of corporations which may merge, incorporated clubs not falling within the statutory permission cannot merge.³ Where the consideration for the merger is adequate, the transfer of the club's assets cannot be set aside on the grounds of a lack of consideration.⁴ Of course, the directors of the club and the majority of the members of the club cannot benefit themselves by the merger at the expense of a minority of the members.⁵

Under a statute permitting any person interested to appeal from an order of the corporation commission, members of an incorporated club may appeal from an order of the commission merging the club with another, even though such members were not formal parties to the proceeding, at least where they were erroneously rejected in their effort to become parties.⁶ Where the right to appeal is granted by statute, an appeal from an order of the commission merging two nonstock social clubs cannot be denied on the grounds that the commission was acting ministerially.⁷

§ 26. Dissolution, Forfeiture of Charter, and Receivership

On dissolution of a club, its property, subject to the claims of creditors, vests in the club members. Charters of incorporated clubs may be forfeited for sufficient cause.

Generally, on dissolution of a club, its property, subject to the claims of creditors, vests in its members according to their respective rights as secured by statute and the club's constitution and by-laws.⁸ Where the constitution and by-laws of the club clearly provide that the club should be owned and governed by the resident members and that non-resident members were merely licensees, nonresident members are not entitled to share in the distribution of assets on dissolution,⁹ and an undivided interest in the club's realty, subject to outstanding encumbrances vests in the resident members.¹⁰ In accordance with the rule as to associations generally, as discussed in the title Associations § 9 a (6), if the members of a club unanimously vote to incorporate it, the creation of the corporation pursuant thereto ipso facto dissolves the club and transfers its property and rights to the corporation.¹¹

A sale of club property, on dissolution, will not be set aside if conducted in accordance with law, where no fraud or collusion is practiced.¹²

A member who has properly been expelled from a social club for nonpayment of dues and assessments ordinarily has no such interest in the club's property as to entitle him to secure the club's dissolution and a distribution of its assets.¹³

It has been held that a statute regulating proceedings for the dissolution of corporations generally does not apply to a proceeding for the social club;¹⁴ but in some states regulative statutes exist which relate specially to clubs.¹⁵

Forfeiture of charter. Clubs should not be dissolved for slight causes, and, if at all, only when it is entirely apparent that the organization has ceased to answer the ends of its existence and no other mode of relief is attainable.¹⁶ The charter of an incorporated club may, however, be annulled, and its franchise forfeited, for sufficient cause,¹⁷

as where a club, organized as a nonprofit corporation, engages in profit making as one of its most important purposes;¹⁸ where the club has not attempted to pursue the objects of its incorporation, and has persisted in conducting a gaming and disorderly house,¹⁹ or where the club makes illegal sales of intoxicating liquors;²⁰ and, where it is made clearly to appear that the charter of a club was fraudulently obtained, or is being abused by its use to shield individuals or a corporation from punishment for violating the laws or otherwise, the charter, in a proper proceeding for that purpose, will be adjudged void.²¹ Also, a court of equity may decree the dissolution of a club, and wind up its affairs, where the objects for which the club was formed are no longer possible of attainment, and the dissension of the parties has substantially dissolved it;²² but, if such a condition of affairs is denied, the court before final hearing will only restrain the disposition or encumbrance of the property.²³

12. Purchase by committee

Defendants, five of whom had been designated as a committee to reorganize, a golf and country club, which had been incorporated as a business corporation, were held to have acted in good faith in purchasing property of club on its dissolution, and to have owed no duty to stockholders inconsistent with right to purchase, so that court was warranted in declining to set aside sale, or decreeing that defendants hold property in trust for stockholders. —Anderson v. "It is doubtless true that a social organization may be incorporated under the non-profit provision of our statute and within reasonable and proper limits engage in an activity to make profit. How far such an organization can go in that direction it is impossible to say in general terms. Each case . . . must stand on its own facts. Where, however, a non-profit corporation shows by its conduct that profit-making is one of its important purposes, if not its chief one, I can see no escape from the conclusion that it has misused and abused its franchise. If its sponsors desire to resort to the act of this state for its incorporation, resort may be had to the provisions appropriate for that form of organization. It was not the intention of the Legislature to allow the easy and liberal provisions of the corporation and revenue statutes applicable to corporations organized not for profit to be enjoyed by corporations whose purpose is in fact to engage in business for profit to such an extent that the desire for profits constitutes a conspicuous object of its existence."—Southerland v. Decimo Club, supra.

Mere liquidation by a club of a profit earning corporation organized by the club's promoter is insufficient of itself to warrant forfeiture of the club's charter.—Southerland v. Decimo Club, supra.

Purchase of certificates in trust

Nonprofit club, requiring members purchase certificates in trust to earn profits through another corporation for itself and members, was subject to dissolution.—Southerland v. Decimo Club, supra.

11 C.J. p 923 note 37.

Reliance on court construction

The fact that a social club, in reliance on a construction placed by the supreme court on the Dramshop Act and on legislative acquiescence in such decision, has enjoyed the privilege of selling intoxicating liquor, and made expenditures in anticipation of the continued enjoyment of such privilege, will not preclude a forfeiture of its charter for abuse of its corporate powers by keeping and selling liquor.—State v. Missouri Athletic Club, 170 S.W. 904, 261 Mo. 576, L.R.A.1915C 876, Ann. Cas.1916D 931.

Receivership. A receiver may be appointed for a club in a proper case,²⁴ and the usual rules as to receiverships apply.²⁵

§ 27. Actions

The usual rules as to actions by or against associations and corporations apply to actions by or against clubs.

24. Mo.—Price v. St. Louis Bankers' Trust Co., 178 S.W. 745.

25. Distribution of funds

Funds collected from members of club in payment of participation certificates issued by trust organized by club, which funds were deposited by club's agents in banks pending determination of right to issue certificates, was properly awarded to members and not to receiver of club which became insolvent, where agents collected money under agreement that money would be returned if corporation commissioner failed or refused to issue permit to sell certificates.—Mifflin v. Cunningham, C.C.A.Cal., 32 F.2d 53.

In suit by receiver of club to collect dues which had been collected from members by agents of trust created by club, in payment of trust participation certificates, evidence of agent that he had been told by club board that permit to issue certificates had not been issued by corporation commissioner and that sums collected would be impounded and returned to members if permit was not received, while incompetent to prove that commissioner had made such order, was proper preliminary testimony in connection with his evidence that he thereafter informed members that money would be so impounded and would be so returned.—Mifflin v. Cunningham, C.C.A.Cal., 32 F.2d 53.

26. Cal.—Camm v. Justice's Court of Santa Rosa Tp., 170 P. 409, 35 Cal.App. 293.

11 C.J. p 932 note 25.

Joint and several liability

Members of club building telephone line being liable jointly and severally, judgment was recoverable against one member without necessity of suing others.—Golden v. Wilder, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 140.

Right to invoke court's aid

Members of unincorporated informal duck shooting club which owned lease of shooting preserve acquired property rights to protect which they may, in proper case, invoke aid of courts.—Burckhardt v. Chambers, 294 P. 977, 160 Wash. 256.

27. Ill.—Genslinger v. New Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, 171 N.E. 514, 339 Ill. 426, reversing 252 Ill.App. 298, transferred 163 N.E. 707, 332 Ill. 316.

11 C.J. p 932 note 26.

Form of action

Club organizer, to whom membership certificates, wrongfully canceled for nonpayment of dues, were issued as compensation may sue in assumpsit on contract or bring action in case.—Genslinger v. New Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, 171 N.E. 514, 339 Ill. 426, reversing 252 Ill.App. 298, transferred 163 N.E. 707, 332 Ill. 316.

Venue

Action for injuries, sustained from shot fired by agent of club outside of club grounds in county wherein club and agent resided, could not be maintained in another county wherein officers of club resided, where officers were not individually liable for acts of agent who had been instructed by officers not to use force on trespassers.—Diversion Lake Club v. Self, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 553.

23. Allegations held sufficient

In action on contract for payment of sum of money to club when board of managers should decide that construction of clubhouse was warranted, allegation that defendant made a partial payment was a sufficient allegation of defendant's acceptance.—Rodway v. Botterel, 11 N.E.2d 201, 56 Ohio App. 497.

Immaterial matters

In club's action against stockholder to recover annual dues and charges for 'privilege of using property and clubhouse facilities, whether stockholder resigned from club was immaterial, where charges for use of club facilities were not assessments against stockholder or stock but a recurring annual charge which holder of stock agreed to pay as long as stock certificate was registered in his name.—Larchmont Shore Club v. Field, 1 N.Y.S.2d 884, 253 App.Div. 897.

Purpose of organization

It is not necessary, to authorize the maintenance of an action against the members of a club by their common name, to show by the complaint the specific purpose or purposes for which the members of the club had associated themselves together.—Camm v. Justice's Court of Santa Rosa Tp., 170 P. 409, 35 Cal.App. 293.

Affirmative defenses

Where contract provided for payment of sum of money to club when board of managers should decide

If a club is unincorporated, actions by or against it are governed by the rules which apply to actions by and against associations generally;²⁶ but, if the club is incorporated, actions by or against it are governed by the rules applicable to actions by and against corporations in general.²⁷ Accordingly, the general rules in such actions as to pleadings, issues,²⁸ and evidence,²⁹ are applicable in actions of that construction of clubhouse was warranted, board of managers must decide within a reasonable time, and its failure to do so would be a matter of affirmative defense in action to recover balance due under contract.—Rodway v. Botterel, 11 N.E. 2d 201, 56 Ohio App. 497.

Matters raised by demurrer

In action on contract guaranteeing payment of club membership on condition that two thousand two hundred fifty memberships shall have been accepted or underwritten, uncertainty and indefiniteness in allegations with reference to condition of acceptance or underwriting of two thousand two hundred fifty members could not be raised by demurrer.—Rodway v. Botterel, supra.

29. Burden of proof

Club, failing to return valuables deposited by member for safe-keeping, has burden of showing absence of negligence.—Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, 253 P. 155, 84 Cal.App. 272.

Evidence held admissible

Club balance sheet was admissible to show club's solvency in action for wrongful cancellation of membership certificates issued to organizer as compensation.—Genslinger v. New Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, 171 N.E. 514, 339 Ill. 426, reversing 252 Ill.App. 298, transferred 163 N.E. 707, 332 Ill. 316.

Evidence held inadmissible

In action by club's paying guest for injuries sustained when rug slipped, evidence regarding practice of using safety devices to prevent slipping of rugs was properly excluded.—Kitchen v. Women's City Club of Boston, 166 N.E. 554, 267 Mass. 229.

Evidence held sufficient to warrant finding of negligence of club in keeping member's valuables deposited for safe-keeping.—Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, 253 P. 155, 84 Cal.App. 272.

Evidence held insufficient

(1) To show negligence of club member in making deposit of valuables for safe-keeping.—Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, supra.

(2) To sustain finding that chairman of house committee abandoned property taken from locker or failed to protect it.—Blackinton v. Pillsbury, 156 N.E. 895, 260 Mass. 123.

this character. Similar general rules are, by a parity of reasoning, also pertinent in questions involving trial,³⁰ and damages.³¹

CLUTCH. A device introduced in the transmission some place between the mechanism in which power is created and the mechanism to which it is applied and which serves to make and break the connection between the two;¹ it has been held synonymous with "grip."²

CO. A prefix to words, meaning "with" or "in conjunction" or "joint."³ As an abbreviation for "company," and "county," or as the chemical symbol for cobalt, see Abbreviations 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5.

COACCIÓN. In Spanish penal law, the offense of illegally and forcibly preventing another from doing some lawful act, or of compelling him to do a lawful or an unlawful one. It is committed by a public official who exceeds his authority by making an illegal arrest, or by dispersing a lawful gathering. So, a claimant to property who uses force to dispossess an adverse claimant is guilty of this offense. A similar rule is applied to a creditor who forcibly seizes the debtor's property to satisfy the claim. A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to try one accused of this crime, nor can one be convicted thereof under a complaint charging amencas; but as the crime of detención ilegal cannot be committed without committing that form of coacción which consists in compelling one to do what he does not wish to do, under a complaint for the former crime a conviction may be had for coacción.⁴

COACH. A kind of carriage;⁵ a vehicle that turns, or that runs by turning, on wheels.⁶ It is a generic term,⁷ has been used to designate the closed passenger car of a cable train,⁸ and has been construed as embracing chariots, mail coaches, omnibuses, stage coaches,⁹ and railroad cars or carriages.¹⁰ "Coach" has been compared or held synonymous with, "car" see Car 12 C.J.S. p 1139 notes 87, 89; has been distinguished from other vehicles chiefly, as being a covered box, hung on leathers, with four wheels;¹¹ and specifically has been contrasted with,

30. Questions held for jury

(1) Whether steward had authority to bind club.—Heckel v. Cranford Country Club, 117 A. 607, 97 N.J.Law 538.

(2) Where jockey was thrown from horse which bolted through open gate in fence around track, whether jockey club was negligent in leaving gate open.—Simmons v. Kansas City Jockey Club, 66 S.W.2d 119, 334 Mo. 99.

Evidence insufficient for jury

In suit to recover purchase price of mowers from members of a golf club, evidence which failed to show that members other than one who signed notes for purchase price authorized such purchase, joined in contract for purchase, signed purchase-money notes, or authorized some one to sign for them, was insufficient for jury on question of liability of members other than one signing notes.—Bell v. Radabaugh, 62 P.2d 79, 178 Okl. 106.

Instructions held proper

Mo.—Simmons v. Kansas City Jockey Club, 66 S.W.2d 119, 334 Mo. 99.

Verdict and findings

(1) Finding that club was liable as lodging house keeper for deposit of valuables by member was not inconsistent with finding that it was liable as bailee for hire.—Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, 258 P. 155, 84 Cal.App. 272.

(2) Verdict awarding maximum value of residence club membership as damages for wrongful cancellation of membership certificates, issued to organizer as compensation was held to be erroneous.—Genslinger v. New Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, 171 N.E. 514, 339 Ill. 426, reversing 252 Ill.App. 298, transferred 163 N.E. 707, 332 Ill. 316.

31. Elements of damage

(1) Loss of wife's company and services was not proper element of damage for club's failure to accord plaintiff privileges.—Jackson v. The Gables, 297 P. 983, 113 Cal.App. 80.

(2) Value of club membership was held not to be recoverable as damages for wrongful cancellation of membership certificates issued to organizer as compensation.—Genslinger v. New Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, 171 N.E. 514, 339 Ill. 426, reversing 252 Ill.App. 298, transferred 163 N.E. 707, 332 Ill. 316.

Interest

Club, failing to return member's valuables deposited for safe-keeping, is liable for interest from date of demand.—Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, 258 P. 155, 84 Cal.App. 272.

and "on the seashore and coast,"⁴³ also "coasts or shores of the United States,"⁴⁴ and "from the coasts."⁴⁵

As a Verb

—Present Tense. In a maritime sense, to navigate along the shore.⁴⁶

In a different sense, to slide on a sled down a hill or an incline covered with snow or ice; also to descend a hill on a bicycle, removing the feet from the pedals, or to ride, glide, or move by, or as by, the force of gravity.⁴⁷

—Coasting. As a verbal noun, in a maritime sense, "coasting" is defined in the Century Dictionary as meaning the act or business of sailing along the coast or from port to port in the same country for purposes of trade; and the term has been held not applicable to a ferry crossing a river.⁴⁸

In another and commonly accepted sense, the term imports the movement of a sled or vehicle by momentum due to some previously exerted force or to the force of gravity;⁴⁹ and has been defined as meaning the movement of vehicles down grade by force of gravity;⁵⁰ also the sport of sliding down hill on a sled or car, or of riding a bicycle, as down a slope, without working the pedals.⁵¹

As relating to the liability of a municipal corporation for injuries due to coasting on the streets see the C.J.S. title Municipal Corporations § 800, also 43 C.J. p 998 notes 23–26.

Coasting trade. A well understood term, defined as meaning the trade along the shore;⁵² commercial intercourse carried on between different districts in different states, between different districts in the same state, and between different places in the same district, on the sea coast or on a navigable river.⁵³ The term has been held to import sea-going trade as distinguished from internal commerce;⁵⁴ has been held applicable to a voyage from New Jersey to New York,⁵⁵ or the trade between the United States and Puerto Rico,⁵⁶ but not to a ferry crossing a river.⁵⁷ The terms "coasting trade" and "coastwise trade" have been used synonymously.⁵⁸

With reference to the federal regulation of vessels see the C.J.S. title Commerce § 79, also 12 C.J. p 67 note 94–p 69 note 8, and to the obligation of taking on a pilot, see the C.J.S. title Pilots § 7, also 48 C.J. p 1193 note 37.

Coasting trade license. A legislative authority to carry on the coasting trade;⁵⁹ a warrant to traverse the waters washing or bounding the coasts of the United States.⁶⁰

Coasting vessel. A term ordinarily applied to a vessel plying exclusively between domestic ports, and usually to one engaged in domestic trade as distinguished from a vessel engaged in the foreign trade or plying between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country.⁶¹

Coasting voyage. A voyage in a vessel engaged in the coasting trade.⁶²

Coast guard. In English law, a body of officers and men raised and equipped by the commissioners of the admiralty for the defense of the coasts of the realm, and for the more ready manning of the navy in case of war or sudden emergency, as well as for the protection of the revenue against smugglers.⁶³

COASTER. A term ordinarily applied to a vessel plying exclusively between domestic ports, and usually to one engaged in domestic trade as distinguished from "a vessel engaged in foreign trade or plying between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country," "an ocean going vessel calling at two domestic ports," or "a pleasure yacht."⁶⁴

COASTWISE. By way of the coast; along shore.⁶⁵ Applied to such vessels as sail coastwise from one port to another port, the term has been held to embrace ships and vessels performing voyages coastwise from state to state, but to exclude those boats which never go out of sight of the port from which they move, and are used merely as ferry boats to cross a river.⁶⁶

Coastwise commerce. It has been said that the term "coastwise," used in its commercial or maritime sense as defining a class of water-borne commerce, includes traffic on a bay, as well as that which goes outside the bay to other domestic ports.⁶⁷

Coastwise trade. Coasting trade; trade or intercourse carried on by sea between two ports or places belonging to the same country.⁶⁸ In a particular context, however, it has been held that the term does not include trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States.⁶⁹ "Coastwise trade" has been held synonymous with "coasting trade" see Coast supra note 58; has been compared with "commerce;"⁷⁰ and has been distinguished from "foreign trade."⁷¹

Plying coastwise. A statutory term which, in a particular connection, has a settled meaning, and is intended to indicate vessels engaged in the domestic trade, or plying between port and port in the United States, as contradistinguished from those vessels engaged in the foreign trade, or plying between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country.⁷²

Other phrases: "Any vessel engaged in the coastwise trade,"⁷³ "being in the coastwise trade,"⁷⁴ and "seamen engaged on vessels in the coastwise trade."⁷⁵

COAT.

As a Noun

Defined by the Standard Dictionary as a garment for outside wear. As applied to a coating for woven fabrics, "coat" has been defined as being a layer proposition that is integrate throughout, and is not usually broken up in any way nor subdivided.⁷⁶

"Coat of arms," see Arm 6 C.J.S. p 341 note 28.

As a Verb

—Coated. Defined by Webster as meaning clad in, or furnished or covered with, a coat.

Phrases: "Coated with . . . metal,"⁷⁷ and "rubber coated fabric."⁷⁸

—Coating. The present participle of the verb "coat," which, as a verbal noun, has been defined in general terms as meaning a covering; any substance spread over a surface for protection or ornamentation, as a coating of plaster or tin foil; and, as applied specifically to woven fabrics, a layer that lies on the surface and is anchored to the fabric in the pores of the fabric, distinguished from "saturating" and "saturation."⁷⁹ Applied specifi-

CODE. (Latin, codex;—Spanish, código;—French, code;—Italian, codice).

In General

As stated in 11 Corpus Juris p 940, this term is used in various senses, but probably the one most approved is that which treats a code as the written expression in concise and logical form of the entire body of law on one or more subjects. This, however, describes the code in its most advanced stage. Those of primitive times were mere collections of laws whose one distinguishing feature was their written form, examples of which are referred to in 11 Corpus Juris p 940.

Roman Codes

In 11 Corpus Juris p 940, an enumeration of early Roman codes is given, including the Gregorian, Hermogenian, and Theodosian codes, the effect of which, it has been said, was to supersede all previous laws.¹⁰

Corpus Juris Civilis. The system of Roman Jurisprudence compiled and codified under the direction of the Emperor Justinian in A. D. 528, 534, comprising the Institutes, Digest or Pandects, Codex, and Novels.¹¹ The history of Corpus Juris Civilis and its component parts is given in 11 Corpus Juris pp 942, 943. The Code of Justinian has perhaps had a greater effect upon the destinies of mankind than almost any other merely human work. The Code was compiled by Tribonian and his associates, who were directed to revise the statutes and laws in very much the same manner that the codification committees revise our statutes; and when the revision was completed, and adopted or proclaimed, it alone became the law, and all laws not included were repealed.¹²

Mediæval and Modern European Codes

Codex Maximillianus Bavaricus Civilis, Constitutio Carolina Criminalis, Corpus Juris Canonici, and Corpus Juris Fredricianum are described and discussed in 11 Corpus Juris p 943.

Code Civil or Code Napoleon. The code which embodies the civil law of France. Framed in the first instance by a commission of jurists appointed in 1800. This code, after having passed both the tribunate and the legislative body, was promulgated in 1804 as the "Code Civil des Français." When Napoleon became emperor, the name was changed to that of "Code Napoléon," by which it is still often designated, although it is now officially styled by its original name of "Code Civil." Here for the first time the entire field of law was covered by a single group of codes, each devoted to a separate and distinct branch.¹³

Montenegrin Code. Independent of the movement inaugurated by the Napoleonic codification was that which produced the "General Code of Property of Montenegro." It was framed by Professor Bogisic of the University of Odessa, a Dalmatian, and came into force in 1888. Owing to the peculiar customs of the south Slavs with reference to the family law and succession, the code covers these subjects only with relation to property. It does, however, treat of persons in general (natural and artificial) as well as of obligations.¹⁴

New German codes. As stated in 11 Corpus Ju-

ris p 943, the German Civil Code (Gesetzbuch) initiated in 1874, and finally promulgated in 1896, has been pronounced "the most carefully considered statement of a nation's law the world has ever seen." It was the source of the civil code of Japan, which displaced one framed on French models, and also of the proposed civil code for China.

In the United States

In this country, a compilation of a body of law, or in a broader sense a system of rules;¹⁵ and so the term has been variously defined as a system of law, a systematic and complete body of law upon the subject to which it relates,¹⁶ or a general collection or compilation of laws by public authority.¹⁷ In a more restricted sense, the term means a collection and compilation of the general statutes in logical and concise form,¹⁸ although it has been stated that there is quite a difference between a code of laws for a state and a compilation of its statutes, the code being broader in its scope and more comprehensive in its purpose;¹⁹ also the word is used frequently in the United States to signify a concise, comprehensive, systematic reenactment of the law, deduced from both its principal sources, the preëxisting statutes, and the adjudications of courts, as distinguished from compilations of statute law only.²⁰

pecially by law or authority; to repress; to curb; to compel or constrain to any action. Coerce means the use of some impelling force against the will or desire of the one coerced. The term imports some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to exist, or be possessed, by the party who, it is claimed, so acted.⁴³ "Coerce" has been compared with "compel."⁴⁴

Coercing the market. Interfering with the right of a particular dealer to enjoy the advantages of freedom to deal with him on the part of all who may voluntarily desire to deal with him.⁴⁵

Other phrases: "Coerce or compel,"⁴⁶ and "coerce, require, demand, or influence."⁴⁷

COERCION. Although it is difficult to define the term sharply, coercion exists where one is, by the unlawful conduct of another, induced to do or perform some act under circumstances which deprive him of the exercise of his free will; it may be either actual (direct or positive), where physical force is put on a man to compel him to do an act against his will, or implied (legal or constructive), where the relation of the parties is such that one is under subjection to the other, and is thereby constrained to do what his free will would refuse.⁴⁸ Violence has been held not to be an essential element,⁴⁹ for coercion is usually accomplished by indirect means, such as threats or intimidation,⁵⁰ physical force being more rarely employed,⁵¹ and may include a compulsion brought about by moral force or in some other manner with or without physical force.⁵² Moreover, it has been held that coercion may be accomplished without threats.⁵³ While coercion does not necessarily imply force and violence or threats of its immediate use, the word does imply necessarily an actual overriding of the judgment and will,⁵⁴ and, in particular connections, by an act which is itself unlawful,⁵⁵ but the mere giving of information on request and the presentation of facts do not constitute coercion.⁵⁶

The term has been used in the sense of coercion in fact and coercion by law; by coercion in fact is meant that duress of person or goods, where present liberty of person or immediate possession of goods is so needful and desirable as that an action or proceedings at law to recover them will not at all answer the pressing purpose. Coercion by law occurs where a court, having jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter, has rendered a judgment which is collectable in due course. To such a case of coercion by law are to be added those quasi adjudications of inferior tribunals, such as assessors of taxes or assessments; where their proceedings are regular on their face, and on presentation make out a right to have and demand the amount levied, and to collect it in due course of law by the sale of goods or a municipal lease of real estate.⁵⁷ "Coercion," in particular connections, has been specifically defined as meaning an act of compelling by force or arms, compulsion, duress, force, or forcible constraint;⁵⁸ has been generally embraced in the term "duress of goods,"⁵⁹ and has been compared COGNATE. Defined in the Century Dictionary as allied by blood, related in origin; also, allied in nature, quality, or form.

Phrase: "Cognate invention."⁸⁰

COGNATES or COGNATI. In the civil law, relatives by the mother, or in the line of the mother; relatives by or through females.⁸¹

COGNATIO or COGNATION. In the civil law, cognation, relationship, or kindred generally; more specifically, relationship through females, as distinguished from agnatio, or relationship through males; also consanguinity, as including affinity. In canon law, consanguinity, as distinguished from affinity.⁸²

COGNATIO LEGALIS: EST PERSONARUM PROXIMITAS EX ADOPTIONE VEL AROGATIONE, SOLEMNI RITU FACTA PERVENIENS.⁸³

COGNITIO. Latin, literally a becoming acquainted with; a knowing; knowledge, acquaintance, cognition. In the language of the jurists, a judicial examination, inquiry.⁸⁴ In the Roman law, the judicial examination or hearing of a cause.⁸⁵ In old English law, the acknowledgment of a fine; the certificate of such acknowledgment.⁸⁶

COGNITIONES. Ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms.⁸⁷

COGNITIONIBUS ADMITTENDIS or COGNITIONIBUS MITTENDIS. In English law, a former writ to a justice of the common pleas, or other, who has power to take a fine, who, having taken the fine, defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it.⁸⁸

COGNITIONIS CAUSÆ. For the sake of cognizance or jurisdiction; for the purpose of ascertaining or judicially investigating.⁸⁹ In Scotch practice, a name given to a judgment or decree pronounced by a court, ascertaining the amount of a debt against the estate of a deceased landed proprietor, on cause shown, or after a due investigation.⁹⁰

COGNITOR. In Roman law, an advocate or defender in a private cause; one who defended the cause of a person who was present.⁹¹ In old English law, one who acknowledges; a cognizor, or conusor.⁹²

COGNIZABLE. Defined, in a general sense, by the Standard Dictionary as meaning that which may be known, perceived, or apprehended. In law, capable of being tried or examined before a designated tribunal.

Cognatio a latere

Law. Latin, relationship from the side; collateral consanguinity. In English law, kindred relationship or consanguinity, which exists between persons who are descended from one and the same stock or ancestor, whether near or remote; as between two brothers descended from the same father, or between two cousins descended from the same grandfather; and thus distinguished from lineal consanguinity, in which the relatives are descended the one from the other.—Adams Gloss.

Cognatio civilis

Latin, a relationship pertaining to citizens, or a civil relationship. In the Roman law, a relationship founded upon the "patria potestas," by virtue of which agnation subsists between: First, those who are or have been subject to the same "patria potestas;" second those who would be so subject if the common tie were still alive.—Adams Gloss.

Cognatio multiplex

A many-fold relationship; a relationship that has many windings, hence in the civil law, a relationship which arises when one person can trace his relationship to another by two, three, or more lines (cognati duplices, triplices, etc.), a circumstance which may be very important in cases of intestate succession.—Adams Gloss.

Cognatio naturalis

A natural relationship, that is, only by ties of blood. In the Roman and civil law, relationship by blood if it originates in absence of a legal marriage, called "naturalis," (in a more limited sense), but if otherwise both civil and natural.—Adams Gloss.

Cognatio spiritualis

A spiritual relationship. In the Roman law, there are cases in which persons not related to each other by blood are treated as if they were so related, that is, when a man adopts an infant, the latter is, so long as this relationship continues, treated as an agnate of the former; and in analogous way a sort of spiritual relationship is held by Roman Catholics, although not by Protestants, to result from baptism and confirmation.—Adams Gloss.

83. A maxim meaning "A legal relationship is a proximity (or near degree of affinity) of persons, either from adoption or assumption (as belonging to the family), established by a solemn act."—Adams Gloss.

thority of the United States,"⁹⁵ and "offenses as are usually cognizable by a justice of the peace."⁹⁶

COGNIZANCE, COGNISANCE, or CONUSANCE.

In its ordinary meaning, the word has been defined as apprehension by the understanding, conscious recognition or identification,⁹⁷ knowledge or notice.⁹⁸ It has been said that while in ordinary parlance, to "have cognizance of" means to have knowledge of, the legal meaning of the word "cognizance" is broader than its ordinary meaning; it not only implies knowledge of the subject matter, but also the power to deal with it.⁹⁹ In its broader sense, the word has been defined as meaning judicial knowledge, or jurisdiction;¹ the right to take notice of and determine a cause.² While "cognizance" has been used frequently as synonymous with "powers," it has also been distinguished therefrom;³ and also from "avowry" see Avowry or Advowry 7 C.J.S. p 1311 note 45.

As a pleading in replevin see the C.J.S. title Replevin §§ 154, 160, 161, also 54 C.J. p 517 note 20—p 520 note 67, and 11 C.J. p 949 note 56.

Acknowledgment or confession. "Cognizance" is a term that may also denote an acknowledgment or confession, as, an acknowledgment of a fine.⁴

Cognizance of pleas. Jurisdiction of causes; in another sense, a privilege granted by the king to a city or town to hold pleas within the same.⁵

Other phrases: "Cognizance and control,"⁶ "judicial cognizance," see the C.J.S. title Evidence § 6, also 23 C.J. p 58 note 5, "take cognizance of a suit,"⁷ "the court having cognizance thereof,"⁸ and "to enter into cognizance for their appearance."⁹

COGWHEEL. Defined in the Century Dictionary as a wheel having teeth or cogs, used in transmitting motion by engaging the cogs of another similar wheel or of a rack; a geared wheel or a gear. As within the operation of the "attractive nuisance doctrine" see the C.J.S. title Negligence § 29, also 45 C.J. p 774 note 69.

COHABIT.

Present Tense

As defined in the dictionaries and cases the meaning of the word in its broad sense is to dwell or live with or together in the same place, house, or abode.¹⁸ More specifically, however, "cohabit" has been defined as meaning to live together as husband and wife or man and wife lawfully or unlawfully as the case may be,¹⁹ as implying sexual intercourse,²⁰ or the possibility of sexual access.²¹

The word is of large and flexible signification, having several meanings, depending on the ideas which accompany its use, and the subject to which it is applied, so that in order to give it proper effect in any given case regard must be had to the subject matter to which it relates, to the situation and conditions in respect of which it is used, and to the explanatory and qualifying language accompanying it.²² The term imports a dwelling together for some period of time, and does not include mere visits or journeys.²³

Phrases: "Bed and cohabit," see Bed 10 C.J.S. p 224 note 93, "cohabit as man and wife,"²⁴ "cohabit with any other woman,"²⁵ "cohabit with such second husband or wife,"²⁶ "lewdly and lasciviously associate and cohabit together,"²⁷ and "lewdly and lasciviously cohabit."²⁸

Cohabiting

The participial form has been similarly defined as meaning dwelling or living together;²⁹ boarding or tabling together, and living together in one or in the same house;³⁰ also the living together of a man and woman ostensibly as husband and wife. The term carries with it the idea of a fixed residence, rather than that of a transient or single unlawful interview;³¹ and, when referring to husband and wife, implies that they are living together and occupying the same house, and have opportunity for sexual access,³² but it does not necessarily include all acts that may occur between males and females.³³

Phrases: "Cohabiting as husband and wife,"³⁴ "cohabiting in a state of adultery,"³⁵ "cohabiting in a state of adultery or fornication,"³⁶ and "cohabiting without being lawfully married."³⁷

COHABITACIÓN. In Spanish law, cohabitation.³⁸

COHABITATION. A derivative of "cohabit," with the same origin and large signification.³⁹ Cohabitation may be lawful or it may be illicit,⁴⁰ and, as sometimes employed, has a very disgraceful meaning.⁴¹ Also, it has been said that cohabitation is not a sojourn, nor a habit of visiting, nor even a remaining with for a time, but that the term implies continuity;⁴² and in its usual sense implies some degree of publicity, since two persons cannot secretly live together.⁴³ In its primary sense, the word has been defined as meaning the act or state of dwelling together, or in the same place with another, living together;⁴⁴ and in its secondary sense, as meaning a living together as husband and wife, or as man and wife;⁴⁵ living together, claiming to be married, in the relationship of husband and wife;⁴⁶ a condition or status of the parties, a status resembling that of the marital relation;⁴⁷ and in a particular connection, has been held to mean habitual concubinage or lying together.⁴⁸ In particular connections, it has been said that the term does not simply mean the gratification of the sexual passion, but to live or dwell together, to have the same habitation,⁴⁹ to live in the same house,⁵⁰ and while, as commonly understood, the term implies sexual intercourse,⁵¹ it seems that sexual intercourse is not necessarily implied, as the word does not even include necessarily the occupying of the same bed.⁵²

COIN.

As a Noun

In its primary sense, the die used for stamping money.⁶⁸

In a monetary sense, coin was the sacred, as well as profane, currency of the ancient world.⁶⁹ In modern times, particularly when used without any prefix, it means metallic money generally;⁷⁰ more specifically, a piece of metal stamped and made legally current as money,⁷¹ or a piece of gold or silver, or other metal, stamped by authority of the government, in order to fix its value, and commonly called money;⁷² and it has been described as a collective word which contains in it all manner of the several stamps and portraitures or species of money in any kingdom.⁷³ While "money" is a generic term, and includes coin, see Money 40 C.J. p 1489 note 81, and p 1491 note 44—p 1492 note 57, it is neither confined to "coin," nor synonymous therewith;⁷⁴ but strictly speaking, "coin" differs from "money" as the species differs from the genus; for coin is a particular species, struck according to a certain process, called "coining";⁷⁵ and is always made of metal,⁷⁶ although the contrary has also been stated.⁷⁷ In a particular connection, "coin" has also been contrasted with "commodity."⁷⁸ The plural "coins" has been defined as meaning pieces of metallic money,⁷⁹ and, pieces of metal, of a particular weight and standard, or value, stamped such by the authority of the government, and to which a particular value is given in account and payment.⁸⁰

For the term as used in indictments and informations for counterfeiting, larceny, and robbery, see the C.J.S. titles Counterfeiting § 27, also 15 C.J. p 368 note 62—p 369 note 72, Larceny § 76, also 36 C.J. p 817 notes 4—14, and Robbery § 36, also 54 C.J. p 1038 note 94.

Copper coin. Used without further description, it means copper money generally, and not a single coin, nor any specific number or kinds of coin.⁸¹

Current coin of the United States. Circulating money, coined by authority of congress.⁸²

Methods of production

"Coking coals are converted into coke in the industrial arts in two principal ways, the gas-retort method and the coke-oven method. The gas-retort method produces illuminating gas as a main product and yields as a by-product a soft, spongy and fragmentary coke known as 'domestic coke.' The coke-oven method produces a hard, strong and structurally coherent coke known as 'metallurgical coke' because of its utility in foundry and blast furnace processes. In the production of coke of the latter grade, the gases of coal distillation may be altogether consumed as in the wasteful bee-hive coke-ovens, or they may be saved as highly valuable by-products as in by-product coke-ovens. The difference in coke products reflects the difference in methods of producing them and in the problems incident to their production."—Otto Coking Co. v. Koppers Co., supra.

COKE.

As a Noun

The kind of coal from which certain volatile gases have been removed by heat,²⁵ the mass of carbon which is left after the volatile matter of coal has been driven off by heat applied in such a manner as not to burn the carbon,²⁶ partially consumed bituminous coal, from which the volatile constituents have been burned away, or partly graphitized carbon, whose fiber has been affected by escaping and burning gases, so that it is lighter than coal, although its substance is hard and dense.²⁷

"Domestic coke." A soft, spongy, and fragmentary coke.²⁸

"Metallurgical coke." A hard, strong and structurally coherent coke.²⁹

As an Adjective

Coke oven. Defined in the Century Dictionary as a furnace, oven, kiln, or retort used for reducing bituminous coal to coke.

As not included by the term "building" see Building 12 C.J.S. p 383 note 9; and as constituting a nuisance see the C.J.S. title Nuisances § 62, also 46 C.J. p 697 notes 66–68.

Other phrases: "Coke products,"³⁰ and "new and useful coke oven;"³¹ also "coking chamber," see Chamber ante p 351 note 15, "coking coals,"³² and "standard coking coal."³³

COL. An assimilated form of "com."³⁴

COLD.

Cold blood. In common parlance a term used to designate a willful, deliberate, and premeditated homicide.³⁵

Cold drawn. Defined in the Standard Dictionary as meaning drawn while cold; as, cold-drawn steel wire.³⁶

Cold water ordeal. The trial which was anciently used for the common sort of people, who, having a cord tied about them under their arms, were cast into a river; if they sank to the bottom until they were drawn up, which was in a very short time, then they were held guiltless; but such as did remain on the water were held culpable, being, as they said, of the water rejected and kept up.³⁷

COLECTIVO or COLECTIVA. In Spanish, defined in Velázquez Dictionary as meaning collective, applied to nouns of multitude, as compañía,—a company.⁴⁶

with the duty of sequestering property left by ecclesiastics and applying the same to public uses.

COLEGATARIO. In Spanish law, according to Escriche, one of several joint legatees.

COLEGIO. In Spanish, according to Escriche, the word is used in somewhat the same sense as the English word "college," but as designating an educational institution it sometimes means one of lower grade, for example, Colegio General Militar, the Spanish military academy. In another sense, an association or society, usually of professional men, as "Colegio de Abogados"—the college of attorneys—which is about the equivalent of the American Bar Association or the English Incorporated Law Association.

COLIBERTUS, COLLIBERTUS, or CONLIBERTUS. Law Latin, one of the Coliberti, a class of inferior tenants mentioned in Domesday.⁴⁷ In feudal law, one who, holding in free socage, was obliged to do certain services for the lord; a middle class of tenants between servile and free, who held their freedom of tenure on condition of performing certain services, said to be the same as the "conditionales."⁴⁸

COLITIGANTE. In Spanish law, as defined by Escriche, one of two or more joint parties to a cause.

COLITIS. Acute dysentery; acute inflammation of the mucous membrane of the large intestine, characterized by fever, pain, and frequent small, bloody discharges from the bowels.⁴⁹

COLLAR. Defined in general by the Century Dictionary as something worn about the neck, whether for restraint, convenience, or ornament; also anything resembling a collar; something in the form of a collar, or analogous to a collar in situation.

In mechanics, a ring or round flange on or against an object.⁵⁵

As a mining term see the C.J.S. title Mines and Minerals § 3, also 11 C.J. p 959 note 91 [a].

Collar leak clamps. Devices coming into use in comparatively recent years, which are clamps used on pipe joints to supplement the old method of joining the pipes together and to prevent leakage, and which are extensively used in natural gas mains.⁵⁶

COLLATERAL.

As a Noun

An obligation or security attached to another to secure that other's performance;⁵⁷ any property or right of action, which is given as security for the fulfillment of a contract or a pecuniary obligation, in addition to the principal security,⁵⁸ a separate obligation attached to another contract to guarantee its payment.⁵⁹ In this sense the term is used to denote a pledge of incorporeal personal property, such as corporate stock or bonds, choses in action, and the like,⁶⁰ assigned or transferred and delivered by a debtor, or by some one for him, to a creditor as security for the payment of a debt or the fulfillment of an obligation.⁶¹

Phrases: "Collateral for indebtedness to assured,"⁶² and "pledge sufficient collateral as security."⁶³

As an Adjective

As an adjective, the word has been defined by Webster as meaning accompanying, indirect, or subordinate;⁶⁴ accompanying as a coördinate, or as a secondary fact, or acting as a secondary agent;⁶⁵ additional or auxiliary;⁶⁶ on the side, or at one side, of a subject;⁶⁷ related to or complementary;⁶⁸ secondary or subsidiary.⁶⁹

In another sense the term means not lineal, but on a parallel or divergent line.⁷⁰

"Collateral" has been held to be the antithesis of "direct."⁷¹

Collateral act. In old practice, the name given to any act, except the payment of money, for the performance of which a bond, recognizance, etc., was given as security.⁷³

Collateral security. A concurrent security for another debt, whether antecedent or newly created, designed to increase the means of the creditor to realize the principal which it is given to secure;⁷⁴ a separate obligation attached to another contract to guarantee its performance;⁷⁵ security for the fulfillment of a contract or a pecuniary obligation in addition to the principal security;⁷⁶ some security additional to the personal obligations of the borrower.⁷⁷

The term necessarily implies the transfer to the creditor of an interest in some property or lien on property, or obligation which furnishes a security in addition to the responsibility of the debtor.⁷⁸ It is said to refer to personal property exclusively,⁷⁹ and to be properly and commonly applied to incorporeal property such as stocks, bonds, and choses in action generally,⁸⁰ as distinguished from pledges of

Collateral to original debt

The etymology of "collateral security" indicates that it is something running along with, and, as it were, parallel to, something else of a similar character. It is collateral to the original indebtedness.

COLLATERALES ET SOCII. Law Latin, assistants and associates [of the chancellor]; the titles of masters in chancery who were so called because they sat by his side at a certain table in Westminster Hall and elsewhere.¹⁶

COLLATIO. Latin, a bringing together, collecting, or contribution, as of money; a throwing into one fund or mass; in juridical Latin, a technical term meaning the putting together of the possessions of several in order to divide them equally among themselves; in English law, a comparison of two things by putting them together.¹⁷

Collatio beneficii. In English ecclesiastical law, the conferring or bestowing of a benefice by the bishop where he has himself the advowson or right of patronage, and which single act of collation affects all that is done in common cases by the acts of presentation and institution.¹⁸

Collatio bonorum. As the civil law doctrine of "collation" requiring one of several heirs to restore to the inheritance, before sharing in the distribution, any property which he may have received from the decedent, hence described in Blackstone's Commentaries as "equalizing the estates or goods," and so analogous to the common-law "hotch pot," see the C.J.S. title Descent and Distribution § 106, also 18 C.J. p 927 notes 26-29, also 11 C.J. pp 962-966.

Collatio signorum. In old English law, a comparison of marks or seals; a mode of testing the genuineness of a seal, by comparing it with another known to be genuine.¹⁹

COLLATION. In its primary sense, the word has been defined by the Century Dictionary as meaning the act of collating, or bringing together and comparing. In derived senses, "collation" has been defined as a devout work;²⁰ and also as a luncheon, and it has been said that in this latter sense, the word may have perhaps a local meaning approximately synonymous with "house of public entertainment," but that such meaning cannot be judicially recognized.²¹

In ecclesiastical law, the act by which the bishop who has the bestowing of a benefice gives it to an incumbent.²²

In practice, the comparison of a copy with its original to ascertain its correctness; or the report of the officer who made the comparison.²³

In maritime law, as contribution or average, see the C.J.S. title Shipping § 224, also 11 C.J. p 966 note 55.

In the civil law, the term, or its Latin, Spanish, and Italian equivalents, namely "collatio," "colación," and "collazione," may be synonymous with the common-law "hotch-pot,"²⁴ and it has been so used in the law of descent, see the C.J.S. title Descent and Distribution § 106, also 18 C.J. p 927 note 28.

Collation of seals. This occurs when upon the same label one seal is set on the back or reverse of the other.²⁵

Collation to a benefice. In ecclesiastical law, this occurs where the bishop and patron are one and the same person, in which case the bishop cannot present the clergyman to himself, but does, by the one act of collation or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases both by presentation and institution.²⁶

COLLATIONE FACTA UNI POST MORTEM ALTERIUS. A writ directed to justices of the common pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the crown, where there had been a demise of the crown during a suit.²⁷

COLLATIONE HEREDITAGII. A writ whereby the king conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk.²⁸

COLLECT. Generally defined as meaning to assemble or gather;²⁹ to bring scattered things (assets, accounts, articles of property) into one mass or fund, or to gather together;³⁰ and more specifically as meaning to reduce to possession;³¹ to demand or obtain payment of an account or other indebtedness;³² to do that which may lawfully be done by the holder of the obligation to secure its payment or liquidation after its maturity.³³ When employed with reference to the collection of money, it often means more than the mere act of receiving the money, and includes the means by which the payment is enforced.³⁴ The power to collect carries with it the authority to use force in the manner pointed out by law to obtain judgment;³⁵ and implies and includes the right, and ordinarily the duty, to employ all the usual, ordinary, and necessary means to accomplish a collection,³⁶ such as the employment of counsel and the institution of legal proceedings for collection,³⁷ although there is authority to the contrary;³⁸ and, under some circumstances at least, the power to sell may likewise be implied in the right to collect.³⁹

"Collect" has been held synonymous with "raise,"⁴⁰ and sometimes synonymous with "levy"⁴¹ and sometimes distinguished therefrom;⁴² and has been also contrasted with "commencement of a legal process."⁴³ The particular meaning of the term "collect" is determined by the sense in which it is used.⁴⁴

Phrases: "Allowed to collect,"⁴⁵ "collect a fine,"⁴⁶ "collect . . . and pay over,"⁴⁷ "collect and remit,"⁴⁸ "collect by a different method,"⁴⁹ "collect on delivery," see C.J.S. titles Carriers § 186, and Shipping § 116, also 58 C.J. p 371 notes 17, 18, "collect, receive and apply to . . . own use,"⁵⁰ "collect taxes,"⁵¹ "forthwith collect,"⁵² "levy and collect,"⁵³

Phrases: "Collected or collectible," see Collect supra note 61, "collectible assets,"⁸⁰ and "good and collectible."⁸¹

As a Noun

Defined in a general sense by the Century Dictionary as the act or practice of collecting or of gathering together; also an assemblage or gathering of objects; and, in a specific application, by the Standard Dictionary as the act or process of receiving or enforcing payment due, as for taxes or personal debts, also the amount of such a payment. When applied to the liquidation of a debt, it has been held that the word implies necessarily the payment of money,⁸² but not necessarily, a full dis-

54. Implies money payment

"The language of the statute is that the employee may not 'collect' from both employer and third person who is at fault. It would be inapt to refer to the temporary medical attention as having been 'collected' by the injured employee. The word 'collect' in the context implies the act of payment and reception of money."—City of Nashville v. Lat-ham, 28 S.W.2d 46, 47, 160 Tenn. 581.

As to grounds of liability

"'Collect' . . . is a term not usually employed in statutes creat-ing legal liability, and . . . 'im-ports an act of payment without reference to the legal grounds on which payment may be demanded.'"—Walters v. Eagle Indemnity Co., 61 S.W.2d 666, 667, 166 Tenn. 383, 88 A.L.R. 654.

As an Adjective

Collection agency. A concern whose business it is to collect all kinds of claims, as well as notes, drafts, and other negotiable instruments, on behalf of others, and to render an account of the same.⁷

Duties and liabilities of a collection agency or an agent to collect see Agency § 161 c.

Other phrases: "Collection district,"⁸ "collection item,"⁹ and "collection suit."¹⁰

COLLECTIVE. Defined by Webster as characteristic of, or relating to, a group of individuals, as the social or collective interests of mankind.

Collective labor agreement. A term used to describe a bargaining agreement as to wages and conditions of work, entered into by groups of employees, usually organized into a brotherhood or union, on one side, and groups of employers, or corporations, such as railroad companies, on the other side.¹¹

Other phrases: "Collective bargaining," see Bargain 9 C.J.S. p 1542 note 56, and "collective nationalization," see Aliens § 135 note 82.

COLLECTOR. Defined generally in the Century Dictionary as one who collects or gathers; and specifically as an official who collects or receives taxes, duties, or other public revenues;¹² one appointed to receive taxes or other impositions: as, collector of taxes, collector of military fines, etc.; also a person appointed by a private person to collect the credits due him.¹³ As applied to the collection of money owed, it has been held that the term does not include a person collecting his own accounts,¹⁴ and that, in a particular connection, it is restricted to that class of persons or collectors who, as a profession, for fee or percentage, collect generally for the public;¹⁵ also it has been held that the term "collector" necessarily implies looking after delinquent or distressed loans,¹⁶ but that, appearing as a title after a person's name, it is descriptive merely and may be treated as surplusage,¹⁷ and that in order for an official to be a collector, he need not possess the power to enforce payment by legal process, but that it is sufficient if he is authorized by law to receive the money for and on behalf of the public.¹⁸

For particular collectors see inter alia such C.J.S. titles as Counties § 109, also 15 C.J. p 481, note 5, Customs Duties § 80, also 17 C.J. p 603 note 23—p 604 note 28, Executors and Administrators §§ 1054, 1055, also 24 C.J. p 1207 note 62—p 1208 note 71, Internal Revenue § 164, also 33 C.J. p 350 notes 36—42, Municipal Corporations § 2071, also 44 C.J. p 1344 note 8—p 1345 note 34, Taxation §§ 645—648, also 61 C.J. p 1013 note 59—p 1015 note 2, and Towns § 164, also 63 C.J. p 204 notes 60—65.

Collector and custodian. It has been said that the phrase, as used in a constitutional provision, embraces every person who is given the legal power to collect, demand, or receive taxes or other public dues or moneys, and retain the same in his possession for any time, however short or long.¹⁹

1. Definitions, Nature and Status

While the terms are in a broad sense interchangeable, "college" and "university" are in a stricter sense distinct terms, the first meaning an institution of higher learning devoted to the arts and sciences and the second union of college and technical or professional schools. Colleges and universities are usually although not necessarily incorporated.

While the word has other meanings, as shown in the general definition of "college" ante, in its most common use "college" designates an institution of learning (usually incorporated) which offers instruction in the liberal arts and humanities and in scientific branches, but not in the technical arts or those studies preparatory to admission to the professions.¹ The word "school" may include a college,² and the terms "school," "college," and "university" may convey the same idea, differing only in grade;³ but schools have been distinguished from colleges,⁴ as a college is a school where instruction is given in the various higher branches of learning,⁵ and it has the right to confer degrees.⁶ The so-called "junior college" has been regarded as not an institution of higher learning, but a mere over-high school falling within the classification of secondary schools and to be regulated as such rather than as a college or university.⁷

As distinguished from a college, a university is an institution of higher learning, consisting of an assemblage of colleges united under one corporate organization and government, affording instruction in the arts and sciences and the learned professions, and conferring degrees,⁸ and the term "university" implies an institution of many departments.⁹ While the term "college" is the generic name for all such institutions, sometimes given even to professional schools,¹⁰ the term "university," as said in the Century Dictionary, is properly limited to colleges which in size, organization (especially in division into distinct schools and faculties), methods of instruction, and diversity of subjects taught approach most nearly to the institutions so named in Europe.

The word "college," as employed in a particular context, may include both the undergraduate and the graduate and professional departments of a college or university,¹¹ and the words "college" and "university" may be and often are used as convertible terms.¹²

A "hospital" with incidental educational features, such as the training of nurses and the instruction of medical students, has been held not to be a "college, academy, school, or seminary of learning."¹³

Corporate character. Usually the term "college" implies a corporation,¹⁴ although it has been applied to unincorporated associations.¹⁵ Ordinarily, it is not a business or trading corporation.¹⁶

§ 2. Public or Private Character and Control

- a. In general
- b. Power of state to change charter

a. In General

The public or private character and control of colleges and universities depend on charter and statutory provisions, and ordinarily an institution supported in whole or in part by state or other public funds is regarded as a state or public institution.

The public or private character and the control of a college or university are determined from its articles of incorporation and the statute authorizing its formation.¹⁸ As stated in a well considered case quoting Corpus Juris to such effect, a college or university is usually deemed to be a public institution or corporation and subject, as such, to the plenary control of the state, where it was instituted by the state and maintained out of state funds,¹⁹ or by means of the aid extended by the national or state government for instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts;²⁰ and in such cases the corporation, if one is created, is a mere agent or instrumentality of the state to carry out the public purpose.²¹ Nevertheless, the view has been taken that such incorporated colleges and universities are technically private, or at most only quasi-public, corporations,²² although where subject to the visitation of regents they form part of the educational system of the state,²³ and that the property of such corporations is their private property and not the property of the state.²⁴ The fact that private donations have been made to them either at the time of or after their incorporation,²⁵ or that tuition charges are made for instruction,²⁶ does not alter their public character. The power of the legislature to control the affairs, property, and funds of even public colleges and universities is, of course, subject to any existing constitutional limitations.²⁷ Where the constitution vests the government and control of the institution in a board of trustees, curators, or regents, the legislature has no power to interfere by statute;²⁸ but a constitutional provision merely vesting the "government" of a university in a board of curators does not deprive the legislature of power to add departments to the university without or against the consent of such curators.²⁹ Where a state university is established by constitutional provision, the legislature has no power to disestablish it;³⁰ nor may the legislature disestablish any department of the university which is to be established or continued by reason of constitutional provisions;³¹ but the legislature may provide for additional courses and degrees, notwithstanding such constitutional provisions, since the establishment of new courses and degrees is not equivalent to the disestablishment of existing departments.³² A college or university founded by private enterprise, and endowed or supported by private donations, is a private eleemosynary institution.³³ Although, by being dedicated by its charter to general charity, the college may acquire the character of a public trust, it does not thereby become a public corporation under the control of the state.³⁴ Subsequent appropriations from the state to the funds of a university which in its foundation was private will not alter its character to that of a public corporation.³⁵ A private corporation may, however, become a public corporation by its own consent and appropriate action by the state.³⁶

The state ordinarily has power to change the charter of a college or university which is a public corporation, although in the absence of such a reservation by statute or charter it may not do so where the institution is private in character.

Where a college or university is a public corporation, its charter may be altered, amended, or repealed at the pleasure of the legislature,³⁷ even though the state has created a body corporate to control its property and affairs.³⁸ In the case of private institutions, however, if neither the statute under which the college is incorporated nor its charter reserves to the state the right to change or modify its charter, no such right exists;³⁹ and, while the state constitutions or the incorporating acts may reserve the right to alter or repeal the charter,⁴⁰ this right is not absolute and unlimited;

the alterations or amendments must be reasonable, made in good faith, and consistent with the scope and object of the act of incorporation;⁴¹ and, if such reservation is limited or restricted, it can be exercised only in the manner, and for the purposes, specified.⁴² As a general proposition, the charter of an educational corporation may be changed by the legislature with the consent of the corporation.⁴³ The legislature has no power to alter the terms and conditions of a trust under which a university was established by a private donor,⁴⁴ or even by a public donor, such as the United States,⁴⁵ one of the states,⁴⁶ or a municipal corporation.⁴⁷ The terms and conditions of the trust may be enforced, although the institution has been incorporated for the purpose of perpetuating and administering it.⁴⁸ The curators, directors, or visitors have no power to consent to legislative amendments of the charter in violation of the essential terms and conditions of the charitable foundation.⁴⁹ Even the original donor and founder has no control over his gifts, and his consent is ineffectual to validate legislative changes.⁵⁰ Minor changes, however, in furtherance of the real objects of the trust may be made by concurrent action of the legislature and the curators, trustees, or visitors.⁵¹

§ 3. Statutory Provisions

Reasonable regulation of colleges and universities is within the police power of the state, and under particular circumstances and particular constitutional provisions the courts have upheld or denied the validity of sundry statutes relating to colleges and universities.

The regulation of educational institutions, such as colleges and universities, is a matter peculiarly affected with public interest involving the welfare, morals, and safety of the citizens and state,⁵⁴ and some constitutional provisions confer upon the legislature discretionary power to deal with education subject only to fundamental restrictions.⁵⁵ Reasonable regulations designed to create a proper standard for colleges and universities have been upheld, although the legislature may not under the guise of regulation impose arbitrary restraints nor suppress private colleges.⁵⁶ In the exercise of its police power the state may impose certain standards or requirements which must be met by professional schools operating within the state,⁵⁷ or may limit or abrogate the right of a university to require vaccination of students before admission, although where the act in question makes no attempt to regulate the subject, it may be held invalid where it prohibits the regulation of vaccination by the university authorities in violation of their constitutional right to regulate matters of health.⁵⁸

Under the circumstances disclosed in particular cases, the courts have upheld the validity of sundry statutes relating to colleges and universities,⁵⁹ such Acts 1915 p 133, directing the removal of the medical department of the University of Alabama from Mobile on a certain contingency, does not violate Const.1901, § 264, by attempting to deprive the university trustees of a discretion as to the management and control of the university, the act relating to a matter within the legislative power of the state.—*Stevens v. L.1869 p 172 § 2, and by vesting its general government in a board of regents under the direction of the legislature, did not prohibit the latter from imposing new and additional duties on the regents or from requiring them to establish and conduct a plant for the manufacture and distribution of hog cholera serum.—*Fisher v. Classification of students

Pol.Code § 1394½, and the rules of the regents of the university thereunder, requiring students at the university to pay a tuition fee if they utes relating to the appointment or removal of teachers⁷³ or trustees.⁷⁴ A statute authorizing the trustees of a university to receive proposals of donations to aid in the foundation of the institution at a certain locality may not be unconstitutional.⁷⁵

On the other hand, under the particular circumstances disclosed in other cases, the courts have held sundry acts relating to colleges and universities invalid,⁷⁶ such as acts providing that a chancellor of a state university shall hold office until removed for cause by the university administrative board,⁷⁷ or providing that counties may send a number of students to a state university free of tuition,⁷⁸ or purporting to transfer the control of university finances from the board of regents to which it was committed by the constitution to another and different body,⁷⁹ or to add to the board of regents persons other than those selected under constitutional provisions.⁸⁰

A constitutional confirmation of "existing laws" under which a state university is functioning renders it a de jure corporation irrespective of the validity of the laws under which it was organized and functioning, and whether or not it was a de facto corporation prior to such constitutional confirmation.⁸¹

The validity of acts relative to the name of a college or university is considered infra § 7.

Free instruction

Educational Institutions Act of 1934, authorizing educational institutions to fix fees and charges, was held not to violate constitutional provision that university and all other state educational institutions shall furnish instruction as nearly free as possible, where there was no suggestion that fees were excessive, or that instruction was not as nearly free as possible.—Board of Regents of University of Arizona v. Sullivan, 42 P.2d 619, 45 Ariz. 245.

Sources of revenue

Educational Institutions Act of 1934, authorizing educational institutions to fix fees and charges, was not invalid because of constitutional provision that revenue for maintenance of such institutions should be derived from federal income from institutional lands and investment of proceeds thereof and by appropriations to be met by taxation, which methods were not exclusive.—Board of Regents of University of Arizona v. Sullivan, supra.

§ 4. Organization and Incorporation

The organization and incorporation of colleges and universities is ordinarily regulated by statute, and such institutions must comply with legal requirements governing their establishment.

Colleges and universities may be incorporated as either public or private corporations, or they may be unincorporated. As organized under some statutes they are mere instrumentalities of the state and not corporations.⁸³ The incorporation of colleges and universities may be and usually is regulated by statute in the several states, as will appear from an examination of statutory provisions and the cases referred to in the note below.⁸⁴ An institution of learning will not be permitted to incorporate unless it appears that its standard of instruction is in conformity to the law providing for such incorporation.⁸⁵ If a certain endowment or subscription is required as a prerequisite to the granting of a charter,⁸⁶ it will not be granted where the subscriptions consist almost entirely of lands, the location and descriptions of which are so indefinite that no valuation can be placed thereon.⁸⁷

Statutes authorizing high-school boards to establish junior colleges impliedly permit them to make the necessary investigations as to the suitability of such a college for the community and to incur the necessary expense, and in the absence of a clear abuse the courts will not interfere with the board's exercise of its discretion in such respects, and it has been held proper for the board to take over an existing junior college and operate it for experimental purposes to determine whether or not such an institution should be maintained permanently by the board.⁸⁸

A collateral attack on a college charter will be sustainable only if the charter is void as distinguished from merely voidable.⁸⁹

Sectarian colleges. A corporation established for purely academic purposes, for education in literature and in the arts and sciences, is in no sense a religious corporation even though it is given into the care, and placed under the management, of a religious body.⁹⁰ The petition for a charter for a denominational university, filed by the designated board of trustees as individuals and not as representatives, made them and no others the incorporators.⁹¹ An amendment to the charter of a college providing for election of its trustees by an unincorporated religious association does not destroy the essential educational purpose of the institution.⁹²

Duration of corporate existence. Educational corporations are designed to be perpetual, and are not subject to the provisions of a general law limiting the life of corporations to the time specified in their charters, or, if no time is mentioned, to a certain term of years.⁹³

cation and training of negro students, and denies the latter the privilege of attending the state law school for white students, it is guilty of an unconstitutional discrimination between the races, and the fact that the state in question pays all of the expenses of negro students at other law schools of equivalent standing in adjacent or other states does not remove the unconstitutional discrimination between races. In the Supreme Court of the United States it was said: "We find it impossible to conclude that what otherwise would be an unconstitutional discrimination, with respect to the legal right to the enjoyment of opportunities within the State, can be justified by requiring resort to opportunities elsewhere. That resort may mitigate the inconvenience of the discrimination but cannot serve to validate it. * * * Separate responsibility of each State within its own sphere is of the essence of statehood maintained under our dual system."

Armstrong, supra.

College as not made trustee

Amendment to charter of unincorporated college that committed control to directors to be elected by an unincorporated association whose members were elected each year by various Baptist Churches of the state did not render college a trustee holding property for use and benefit of General Association as cestui que trust, and thus note executed by college did not bind individual members of association.—Farm & Home Savings & Loan Ass'n of Missouri v. Armstrong, supra.

93. Mo.—State v. Westminster College, 74 S.W. 1116, 175 Mo. 62. 11 C.J. p 981 note 69.

In New York it has been held that colleges and universities must be incorporated under the Education Law, formerly University Law,⁹⁴ pursuant to which the board of regents has power to grant charters of incorporation,⁹⁵ and that they cannot be incorporated as membership corporations;⁹⁶ but it has also been held that certain kinds of institutions for educational purposes and for the promotion of education and instruction could be organized under the provisions of the Business Corporations Law.⁹⁷ There is also authority to the effect that a medical college can be incorporated only by a special act or under an act providing for the organization of such corporations, and that the incorporation of a medical college is not authorized by an act providing for the incorporation of benevolent, charitable, scientific, and missionary societies.⁹⁸

Amendment of charter. The charter of a college or university is ordinarily subject to amendment.⁹⁹ Where an amendment to the charter of a college is ambiguous, it will if possible be construed so as to be valid rather than void.¹

Separate institutions for colored race. In the absence of legislative authorization, the courts may not properly order establishment of a separate law school for colored students.²

§ 5. Location and Change Thereof

While there may be circumstances constituting a valid legal obstacle to change of location of a college or university, as in the case of contractual obligations, the courts will ordinarily recognize the right to change of location.

Where the location of a college is fixed by its charter such location cannot be changed³ without amendment of the charter⁴ or consent of the legislature;⁵ and where it has been fixed by the constitution the location cannot be changed without an amendment of the constitution.⁶ Where a change of location is authorized by statute, the location can be changed only to such places as are authorized by the statute.⁷ An institution established under a contract that it shall be located permanently at a certain place cannot be changed therefrom.⁸

On the other hand, it has been held that inclusion in the charter of provisions fixing the location of a university in a certain place does not necessarily preclude its removal to a different place,⁹ that statutes requiring applicants for new corporate charters to state the places where corporate business is to be transacted refer merely to the place where corporate functions are to be performed and do not limit the operations of a theological school or college so applying to the place specified in the application,¹⁰ and that provisions in an act of incorporation of an existing college which merely recite the borough and county of the college's then location do not restrict it to operating in such location.¹¹ Relocation of a university will not be precluded by conveyances for the purpose of establishing it in a certain city where there also appears a general purpose to promote education throughout certain states,¹² nor will relocation be restrained on the theory of a trust resulting in favor of such city or other donors,¹³ although a city may be entitled to a refund of contributions on relocation of the institution at a situs other than that of such city.¹⁴ Where it appears that the founder of a college does not intend to limit its location permanently on the premises devised, the location may be changed to a more suitable place without a forfeiture of the original site.¹⁵ Where the university is purely a public state institution, its location may be changed by the legislature,¹⁶ notwithstanding donations have been made to it to secure its location at a particular place;¹⁷ but it is sometimes provided by statute in such cases that the university shall refund the amounts subscribed or donated.¹⁸ Constitutional provisions requiring consent of two thirds of the legislature before removal of a state university have been held inapplicable to departments of such university acquired after adoption of such constitutional provisions.¹⁹

11. Mere matter of description

Act April 7, 1846, Pub.L. 497, incorporating "the Meadville Theological School, in the borough of Meadville, in the county of Crawford," simply individuated existing unincorporated school, and did not limit its location to such borough or county.—Hempstead v. Meadville Theological School, supra.

12. Benefit of southwestern states generally

Conveyances for the purpose of establishing an educational institution at a certain city, in order to advance the cause of education in the state and throughout the Southwestern States, thus coupling the location with a statement of the general purpose, did not create conditions requiring the institution to be located perpetually at such place.—Southwestern Presbyterian University v. City of Clarksville, 259 S.W. 550, 149 Tenn. 256.

13. Conditions as at most conferring right to withdraw donations

The power of lawfully constituted authorities of a university to proceed by steps authorized by law to relocate its situs cannot be restrained on the theory of a trust resulting in favor of the city or other donors of contributions conditioned on permanency of location within that particular community, however large or numerous, but such conditions can at most give the donors the right to withdraw their contributions in case of removal.—Southwestern Presbyterian University v. City of Clarksville, supra.

14. Contractual obligation

Where city, to induce location of sectarian university, there delivered to it fifty thousand dollars in bonds, on condition that the city should have at all times as many as ten students in the university, it was entitled to a return or refund of the bonds if the university subsequently relocated, a contractual obligation being created in view of the city's doubtful authority to spend its funds outside its limits or to make gratuitous contributions to sectarian institutions.—*Southwestern Presbyterian University v. Medical college

Const.1901 § 267, prohibiting the removal of the University of Alabama and other institutions there named, except on a vote of two thirds of the legislature, in view of § 264, applies merely to the removal of the University, as located at Tuscaloosa when the constitution was adopted, and not to the Mobile Medical College, a mere subsidiary located in another congressional district.—Stevens v. Thames, supra.

It does not follow that because the charter of an educational corporation provides that its buildings shall be located at a place named, with power to establish a branch at another place, that all the powers conferred upon it must be exercised at such places and no other. The corporate purpose, that of furnishing education, must be carried on at the place or places named, but the incidental powers necessary and proper to maintain the institution there may be exercised elsewhere.²¹

Right to sue to prevent removal. A private individual with no special interest has no right to sue with respect to the location of a university;²² although in a proper case persons who have contributed funds for the establishment of the college in the place where it was located have a standing to maintain a suit in equity to prevent its removal.²³

§ 6. Powers and Franchises in General

The powers and franchises of a college or university are in general such as may be conferred by charter, statutory, or constitutional provisions. Such an institution will ordinarily be accorded the right to perform acts incidental to its main purpose, although it will be denied the right to perform acts not reasonably incidental.

The charter, under the statutes, measures the power of a college or university to the exclusion of all others not expressed or fairly implied,²⁴ and an incorporated university or college, or an incorporated board of regents or board of trustees of a university, as in the case of any other corporation, can do no act for which authority is not expressly or impliedly granted in its charter or act of incorporation;²⁵ but they have such powers as are expressly given to them by their charters, or such as by fair implication are necessary to the execution of their object.²⁶ A university cannot without express power create corporations²⁷ nor create separate colleges.²⁸ It cannot exceed its chartered or statutory powers with regard to tuition charges, as shown infra § 27, nor with respect to distribution of revenue,²⁹ payment of salaries,³⁰ or conditions of admission, as shown infra § 25.

Particular powers exercised by a college or university should be reasonably incidental to the main purpose of maintaining such institution, and under applicable charter, statutory, or constitutional provisions it has been held that a college or university may conduct a store to sell books and supplies to students and professors,³¹ or operate a student's infirmary,³² or rent buildings in which to conduct courses of instruction,³³ although where the particular act is not reasonably incidental to the maintenance of the college or university the power to perform it may be denied, and such institutions have been denied the power to conduct a commercial enterprise.³⁴

A university with a medical college as one of its departments has power to establish and to maintain a clinic and hospital for the sick, a hospital in which clinical instruction can be given being a necessary adjunct to the teaching of medicine.³⁵ A university with a college of agriculture may establish and maintain experimental stations in connection therewith.³⁶

Question of ultra vires, in respect of the action of a college as to a road petition may, it has been held, be raised only by the state.³⁷

§ 7. Name

The right to employ the name "college" or "university" may be prohibited to enterprises not complying with statutory requirements, and an established college or university will be protected against an unfair use of the same or a similar name by another institution. Change of name is ordinarily permissible.

The right to use the name "college" or "university," or the like, is sometimes prohibited except by the institutions and on the terms and conditions prescribed by statute, as will more particularly appear from an examination of the statutes and of the cases referred to in the note below.³⁸ The Change of name. A college or university may, with the consent of the legislature, change its name;⁴¹ and the courts have upheld the validity of legislation authorizing a change in the name of a university.⁴²

§ 8. Degrees, Diplomas, and Certificates

a. In general

b. Granting or withholding

a. In General

Colleges and universities ordinarily have the power to confer degrees and issue diplomas to students properly entitled thereto.

A "degree" is any academic rank recognized by colleges and universities having a reputable character as institutions of learning, or any form of expression indicative of academic rank so as to convey to the ordinary mind the idea of some collegiate, university, or scholastic distinction.⁴³

The conferring of degrees, or the issuing of diplomas or certificates, except by duly authorized institutions, is sometimes prohibited by statute and made an offense, as will appear from an examination of statutory provisions and of the cases referred to in the note below.⁴⁴

Colleges and universities have power to confer degrees and issue diplomas where such power has been conferred upon them either expressly,⁴⁵ or by necessary implication,⁴⁶ although a professional school offering a short course may not conduct it under the pretense that it is a school affording the customary full length course and that its graduates are entitled to diplomas of the same character as those conferred by schools offering the full course required for the profession in question.⁴⁷ A college incorporated under a general law authorizing the incorporation of colleges has implied power to grant diplomas, as this right is one of the characteristic features of a college;⁴⁸ but a college incorporated as a literary or scientific institution has no implied power to confer degrees.⁴⁹ A medical college with authority to confer degrees in medicine may grant degrees in dentistry, surgery, and pharmacy, because the subject "medicine" is broad enough to include them as related subjects.⁵⁰ Under statutes prohibiting the conferring of any degrees, unless specially authorized, special authority to confer the degree of doctor of medicine does not authorize the conferring of a degree in dentistry.⁵¹ Where a college is empowered to grant a degree, and the mode of making such grant or proving the same is not specially pointed out, a vote that the degree be granted is an execution of the power, and a duly authenticated copy of the vote is sufficient proof of it.⁵²

A diploma is not necessary to the conferring of a degree, although it is an appropriate means of evidencing the fact,⁵³ where the diploma is au-

could properly be denied right to use name "school of law" by regents of University of State of New York.—Institute of Metropolis v. University of State of New York, 291 N.Y.S. 893, 249 App.Div. 33, affirming 289 N.Y.S. 660, 159 Misc. 529.

thenticated by the corporate seal.⁵⁴ A university may not properly issue diplomas to students without requiring necessary attendance and is guilty of fraud in so issuing diplomas to be used as a basis for securing state license to practice a profession.⁵⁵

b. Granting or Withholding

While the granting of degrees is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the college or university authorities, a student ordinarily has the right to pursue his course of study to its completion and to receive his degree on successful completion of the course with due observance of reasonable regulations as to attendance, deportment and other matters, and the college or university may not arbitrarily deny him a degree.

Ordinarily, one matriculating at a college or university establishes a contractual relationship entitling him on compliance with reasonable regulations as to scholastic standing, attendance, deportment and payment of tuition to pursue his selected course of study to completion and to receive a degree or certificate awarded for successful completion of such course; but the ordinary rule is subject to modification by university regulations assented to by the student.⁵⁶ A college or a university may refuse a degree to a contumacious student,⁵⁷ or to one who has not complied with the conditions required,⁵⁸ but a college cannot arbitrarily and without cause refuse examination and degree to a student who has complied with all the conditions entitling him thereto,⁵⁹ nor deny to him a certificate of attendance and that he satisfactorily passed the final examinations, where the conduct, on account of which his degree is denied, occurs after final examination.⁶⁰ A requirement that a candidate for a degree shall pass a satisfactory examination means satisfactory to the faculty whose duty it is to conduct such examination.⁶¹

The decision of the college authorities is conclusive on the question as to whether a student has performed the conditions entitling him to a degree, if they act in good faith and within their jurisdiction.⁶² The exercise of a discretionary power to withhold a degree will not be interfered with by the court in the absence of bad faith or clear abuse.⁶³ The burden of proving bad faith and misconduct on the part of the college authorities is on the student claiming a degree.⁶⁴

b. Appropriations

Appropriations for colleges and universities may be absolute or conditional, and the amount, purpose, and other details of such appropriations will ordinarily depend on applicable statutory provisions.

Appropriations of money in aid of colleges and universities may be absolute and unconditional,⁷⁰ or they may be conditional.⁷¹ If, however, a condition is attached to an appropriation, it must be strictly performed to entitle the institution to the sum offered.⁷² The disposition of the funds appropriated by congress for the aid of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts is left to the discretion of the states,⁷³ subject only to the limitation that the fund must be applied to its intended purpose.⁷⁴ Under an act making an appropriation to such schools as shall be actually engaged in a certain kind of instruction, only such colleges may take as were in operation at the time of the appropriation.⁷⁵ The amount of such appropriations,⁷⁶ the time⁷⁷ and manner of withdrawing the same, whether on voucher⁷⁸ or otherwise,⁷⁹ the particular purposes for which it may be used,⁸⁰ the time within which such purpose should be executed,⁸¹ the officer or board entitled to expend it,⁸² the priority of warrants,⁸³ and the fund from which the money is to be drawn⁸⁴ are in general con-

Debts for past support and maintenance

Acts 1922 c 100, appropriating six thousand dollars for improvements to the buildings and grounds of the West Kentucky Industrial College and fifteen thousand dollars annually for support and maintenance, does not authorize the use of the sums appropriated for the payment of debts contracted for past support and maintenance, especially as Acts 1918 c 18, whereby the legislature assumed control of such college, shows intention to incur any obligation in excess of the amounts thereby appropriated.—Davis v. Steward, 248 S.W. 531, 198 Ky. 248.

University or agricultural experimental purposes

Mill Tax Act 1913, limiting appropriations to Purdue University to amounts raised by tax provided for in act, was intended to cut off appropriations for buildings and other special purposes, but not previously established annual appropriations for Agricultural Experiment Station and Agricultural Extension Department of the University, and therefore did not affect appropriation made by Acts 1911 c 54; Acts 1913 c 135, and Acts 1913 c 340; nor did it repeal Acts 1913 c 184, appropriating money for greenhouse, dairy building and equipment, and purchase of additional farm lands; nor did it prevent other payments to trustees of university as special agents for administration of Agricultural Extension Department. The saving provision in the act did not necessarily apply to state appropriations, federal appropriations to departments of university being thereby preserved, since such federal appropriations were subject to be cut off by action of state; and appropriations for experiment station and Agricultural Extension Department made pursuant to federal acts, such as that made by Acts 1909 c 167, are permanent appropriations exempting them from operation of act. Also, it was held that mention in the act of departments of Indiana University and omission to mention departments of Purdue University sufficiently indicated that departments of Purdue University were excluded from use and benefit, and also from limitations, of the act.—Indiana State Board of Finance v. State, 121 N.E. 649, 188 Ind. 36.

81. Expenses for first year

In appropriating a certain sum to junior college for payment of operation expenses for first year of operation or for school year 1938-1939, legislature intended that college building should be promptly constructed so as to be ready for occupation and use on or prior to beginning of school year 1938-1939, under L.1937 cc 113, 158.—Chez ex rel. trolled by the terms of applicable statutes. It has been held that a public school fund may not be used as the basis of an appropriation for colleges and universities,⁸⁵ although constitutional prohibitions against the appropriation of money raised for public schools for the maintenance of sectarian schools do not preclude appropriation of such moneys for sectarian institutions of higher learning, since the term "public schools" does not include colleges and universities.⁸⁶

Necessity for specific appropriation. Money paid into a state treasury as taxes belongs to the state, and cannot be expended by the board of regents of a state university without a specific appropriation by the legislature;⁸⁷ but money donated by the United States to a university for a specific purpose is no part of the funds of the state, and no legislative appropriation is necessary.⁸⁸

§ 10. Property and Funds

The property and funds of a college or university ordinarily comprise its grounds and buildings whether used for study or incidental purposes such as athletics, and also include whatever it may have by way of endowments. The institution may not issue bonds without statutory authority, although where so authorized it may issue valid obligations within the restrictions imposed, which are generally to be regarded as obligations of the college or university itself and not of the state.

A "college estate" comprises not only the college buildings and grounds, but also property held by the college by way of endowment.⁸⁹ While the purpose of a college or university is not the erection or equipment of buildings therefor,⁹⁰ obviously buildings, including new or additional ones as the needs of the institution expand, are necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes of the college or university. In addition to the buildings requisite for instruction, the physical property of a college or university properly includes athletic fields,⁹¹ apartments or dwelling houses for the use of officers and professors,⁹² and dormitories or houses for the residence of the students.⁹³ A legislative restriction on the location of buildings does not prevent a change of location which does not violate the restriction.⁹⁴ The funds of a state university are not public funds within the meaning of statutes relating to public funds or state moneys generally.⁹⁵

Bonds. In the absence of statutory authority, a state college or university may not issue bonds,⁹⁶ although where so authorized by the legislature, it may issue bonds and pledge its resources as security within the limitations imposed by statute.⁹⁷ Under applicable statutory provisions, it has been held that bonds issued by a state university may be sold to private investors,⁹⁸ or that the primary purpose of the legislature in authorizing the construction and financing of buildings by such institutions was to enable them to erect buildings and pay for them with bonds payable out of revenues derived from the buildings;⁹⁹ or that a state board of education was authorized to pledge a portion of the income and interest from a university land grant to secure bonds issued as security for repayment of a loan from the federal government, for construction of a building at a state university,¹ that the authority of such board to issue the bonds was not vitiated by the fact that the building would not be completed before expiration of the emergency period to which the operative effect of the enabling statute was limited,² and that where no part of the debt to be incurred is to be repaid from taxes, it is unnecessary to submit to the voters the question of issuing the bonds and incurring the indebtedness.³ It has been held that statutory bonds issued by a university are to be regarded as valid obligations of the university, but not as obligations of the state,⁴ and that no provisions need be made to provide interest and sinking fund requirements out of taxation.⁵

§ 11. — Right to Acquire, Hold, and Convey Property

Broadly speaking an incorporated or unincorporated college or university has the power to acquire, hold and transfer real and personal property essential to its maintenance as an educational institution or within the scope of the purposes contemplated by its charter or by applicable statutory provisions.

An incorporated college or university has at least implied, and frequently express, power to take, receive, hold, and convey property for the purpose of carrying out its objects, that is, the establishment and maintenance of an educational institution.⁶ Even where there is doubt as to the college or university being a de jure corporation, but where it is at least a de facto corporation, it can take, hold, and convey property.⁷ The amount of property which a college or university may take or hold is, however, often limited by its charter or by the statutes of the state.⁸ While a statute removing the limitation cannot affect property rights already cation to pledge students' fees, together with rents and revenues of students' union building at university, so long as bonds against building were outstanding, was valid although extending beyond term of individual members, and pledge by state board of education of accumulated assets in students' union building fund to repay money borrowed for immediate erection of union building was authorized, where fund was raised for specific purpose of erection of building.—*State ex rel. Validity of bonds under constitutional inhibition as to "debts"

Under statute authorizing state institutions to borrow from federal agencies for erection of buildings, to issue bonds and pledge student fees for repayment of money borrowed, and providing that bonds would not constitute an obligation of the state or be payable out of any moneys appropriated to college by the state, money borrowed from a federal agency by the Alabama College would constitute a "debt" of the Alabama College as respects whether obligation was invalid under constitutional provision prohibiting creation of new debts by state or its authority, but as respects pledge of students' fees and other moneys not derived from appropriation by the state to the college for repayment of bonds, the debt created by the loan would not be a "debt created by the state or its authority" within the inhibition of the constitution against the creation of a new debt by the state or its authority.—Harman v. Alabama College, 177 So. 747, 235 Ala. 148.

Under applicable charter or statutory provisions, it has been held that a college or university may acquire and hold land,¹¹ as in the case of land given it for park purposes of students and the general public,¹² or that it may purchase land for college purposes and construct necessary buildings thereon,¹³ or may purchase property for development and resale,¹⁴ or may acquire and hold national bank stock,¹⁵ or a note and mortgage.¹⁶

§ 12. — Private Donations

Colleges and universities are ordinarily authorized to receive or reject private donations, and where such are accepted the institution must comply with any conditions attached thereto. A promise to contribute to a college or university is enforceable where supported by a sufficient consideration, such as retention of the institution in the place where then located.

The endowment of a college is commonly understood to include all the property, of whatever character, given to the institution for its permanent support.¹⁷ Educational institutions are usually expressly authorized to receive private donations,¹⁸ and it has been held that a college may receive a gift of money for erection of a church for use of its students.¹⁹ The directors, regents, or trustees are at liberty to reject a proposed donation, if in their opinion the terms are unlawful, or for any reason unacceptable to them.²⁰ If, however, they accept it, they do so on the terms prescribed,²¹ and a college or university may not lawfully carry out an agreement in violation of the terms of an endowment accepted by it.²² A condition precedent must be complied with to make the promise of an endowment a binding contract.²³ Similarly, on the breach of a condition subsequent the donation will be forfeited.²⁴

A promise or offer to donate or contribute is binding and enforceable when supported by a consideration, such as the assumption of responsibilities and incurring of liabilities,²⁵ the retention of the college in the place where it is then located,²⁶ the acceptance of the subscription,²⁷ the raising of an endowment,²⁸ or an implied promise to use the funds subscribed in conformity with the terms and object of the subscription.²⁹ In the event of a failure of consideration, the promise is not enforceable;³⁰ but where the college performs its part of the agreement, the other party is bound to pay the promised sum,³¹ and consolidation of a college or university with another institution in furtherance of the general educational purpose of the merged institution does not constitute a failure of consideration absolving a subscriber of his obligation to contribute.³²

The profits accruing to the vendee in a sale of land scrip, by virtue of the general act of congress, donating such scrip to the state, form no part of the purchase price thereof, and may be the subject of a valid gift to a university.³³

A statute validating gifts for the education of persons within the state has been construed as requiring the college or university to be located within the state but as not requiring the beneficiaries or students to be confined to residents of such state.³⁴

§ 13. — Title to Property

A college or university may hold absolute or conditional title to property in accordance with the circumstances involved, and title to property of a state institution is sometimes regarded as vested in the state.

In determining the title of an incorporated college or university to real property held by it, reference must be had not only to the terms of the conveyance but also to the charter of the institution and pertinent statutes, as the property is held under the conveyance and charter as if they constituted but one instrument,³⁵ and such conveyances are within the operation of a general statute providing that all deeds shall be construed to be in fee, with or without the word "heirs," unless the contrary clearly appears.³⁶ Particular conveyances have been construed to be absolute rather than in trust,³⁷ and to convey a fee rather than an estate of lesser dignity,³⁸ or to be made on condition subsequent.³⁹ Conditions attached to a grant or donation should be observed by the college or university, are ordinarily enforceable where the instrument is supported by sufficient consideration,⁴⁰ although not where in violation of law,⁴¹ and in the absence of waiver breach of a valid condition subsequent may afford ground for reversion of the property to the donor or his representatives.⁴² It has been held that the legal and equitable titles to

Presumption of deed

Where land was conveyed to Baptist Convention for university, which reconveyed portion of land twenty years thereafter, law will presume deed by Convention to university, if necessary to perfect title in university.—McManaway v. Clapp, supra.

39. Assumption of indebtedness

A conveyance of land to a college in consideration of one dollar and of specified covenants and conditions, including grantee's assumption of bonded indebtedness of grantor on the land to become due in the future, and on grantee's failure to pay the indebtedness at maturity, a reversion to grantor, and whereby grantee pledges itself in that event to reconvey to grantor, or its assigns, with restriction on grantee's right to encumber or dispose of land "conveyed" until conditions of deed had been complied with, is a conveyance on condition subsequent, in view of Civ. Code 1910 §§ 3716, 3717.—City of Gainesville v. Brenau College, 103 S. E. 164, 150 Ga. 156.

Condition subsequent not shown

Deed to Baptist Convention in trust for university for educational purposes did not convey land on condition subsequent, avoiding conveyance if property ceased to be used for purposes specified.—McManaway v. Clapp, 148 S.E. 18, 150 S.C. 249.

Where a condition of the instrument donating a fund to a university was that the board of trustees should take a bond from the officers or agents having the custody and investment of the fund, it was the duty of the board to require such bond.—Curtis & Barker v. Central University of Iowa, supra.

Sufficient consideration shown

Where donors made a proposal to donate funds to a university "on such reasonable conditions as we may name when formally presented to the board," a provision in a later instrument of donation, carrying out the provisions of the proposal, for forfeiture and return of the fund for noncompliance with the conditions and trusts therein, was supported by a sufficient consideration.—Curtis &

Barker v. Central University of Iowa, supra.

41. Ill.—Trustees of Eureka College v. Bondurant, 124 N.E. 652, 289 Ill. 289.

Void condition subsequent

Condition subsequent conveyance to trustees of Eureka College providing that receipts of land should remain perpetual fund for the use of college, and that on failure so to use land and receipts therefrom property should revert, was void, and trustees took property in fee absolutely, § 6 of act of Feb. 6, 1855, Priv. Acts 1855 p 542, incorporating college providing that donation of real estate lands shall be sold within ten years from the date of donation and value applied as specified by donor.—Trustees of Eureka College v. Bondurant, 124 N.E. 652, 289 Ill. 289.

42. Change of denominational management

Where by the charter of a university it was under control of the Baptist denomination, and the provisions to this effect were declared unalterable, and an instrument, making a donation to the university, prohibited its removal from the city where it was then located, and provided for the return of the fund for noncompliance with the conditions or trusts thereof, an amendment of the charter to vest control in the Reformed Church was a violation of the contract, entitling the donors' heirs to a return of the fund. Where an instrument donating money to a university contained provisions as to the grade of college work to be main-

a fund do not merge although the trustee and the cestui are the same, where an instrument donating a fund to a university provides for forfeiture and return of the fund for noncompliance with conditions and trusts therein.⁴³

Where lands are deeded to a college or university to be used for specified purposes, and no time is set for the beginning of use for such purposes, it will be presumed that the grantor contemplated that the time element should be left to the discretion of the university authorities, a reasonable time will be allowed for the beginning of such use, and delay not exceeding a reasonable time is no ground for forfeiture of the grant.⁴⁴ Forfeiture will not be decreed for breach of conditions or covenants contained in the deed where the facts show that there was no such breach.⁴⁵

It has been held that on the vesting of title to public lands of the state in a state university, such lands still remain those of the state,⁴⁶ that money deposited in a bank by a state university constitutes state funds,⁴⁷ and that particular records extant after destruction of general land archives should be construed as showing title in the state through the trustees of a state university rather than in a city,⁴⁸ although in the absence of conditions contained in an appropriation, the proceeds of sale of property of a state university may be paid to the treasurer of the university instead of the state treasurer.⁴⁹

On the sale of goods to a citizens' committee on a credit basis, but without retention of title in the seller, the committee has power to pass title to a university without lien or trust in favor of the seller.⁵⁰

§ 14. — Control and Disposition

The control and disposition of college and university funds ordinarily rests with the trustees of a private institution or with the board of regents in the case of a public institution, and must be in accordance with applicable provisions of controlling grants, charter, statute, and constitution.

The control and disposition of college or university funds and property is ordinarily confided to a board of trustees or regents,⁵¹ or to a state treastained, the naming of professors, the endowment of chairs, etc., and provided for return of the fund for failure to comply with the conditions or in the execution of the trusts therein, "reasonable consideration being made for unavoidable delays and unforeseen contingencies," the quoted provision did not authorize a diversion of the fund to the support of the university after it had changed its denominational management.—Curtis & Barker v. Central University of Iowa, supra.

Waiver not shown

Where an instrument donating a fund to a university provided for forfeiture and a return of the fund for noncompliance with its conditions and trusts, and the heirs of the donors acted promptly after the charter was amended to place control of the university in a different religious denomination, there was no waiver of the breach.—*Curtis & Barker v. That defendant, regents of the University of California, to which plaintiff granted lands to be used for forestry investigation and research, had no knowledge of cattle straying on the lands, and that no damage was caused by such cattle, should be considered in determining whether there had been a breach of covenant forbidding use of lands for a stock range. Facts were insufficient to show that land granted to the regents of the University of California for forestry investigation and research had been "used for a stock range" in violation of condition in deed, the verb "to use" meaning to employ; to put to a purpose; to avail oneself of.—Whitaker v. W. J. Corbett Hardware Co., 215 P. 510, 25 Ariz. 199.

Federal grants and private donations

The proceeds of federal land grants, federal appropriations, and private donations to the state university are trust funds and not subject to the constitutional requirement that money must be appropriated before it is paid out of the state treasury, and may be expended by the board of regents of a state university subject only to limitations imposed by the federal government or private donors.—State v. State Board of Education, 196 P. 201, 33 Idaho 415.

Public works statutes as inapplicable

Comp.St. §§ 367-380, relative to the powers and duties of the department of public works, pertain only to contracts or purchases creating claims against the state, and do not apply to the purchase of property or the making of contracts by the board of regents, where the board has funds available for the purpose.—*State v. Acceptance by regents subject to conditions

In appropriating public funds to the state university, the legislature may impose such conditions and limitations as it deems proper, and, if accepted by the regents, the appropriation is coupled with the conditions, and can be expended only as

The regents of a university may not impose a trust or condition on the use of a tract of land set aside as university campus by public enactment without consent of the legislature.⁶⁰ It has been held that funds of a state college by statute coming into the hands of the state treasurer can be paid out by him only pursuant to biennial appropriation of the legislature,⁶¹ although federal funds received by a state college and handled without the intervention of state officers other than the board of regents may be disposed of without a legislative appropriation.⁶² Questions as to whether particular federal funds should be paid to the state treasurer and whether an appropriation is prerequisite to their disposal are ordinarily dependent on provisions of controlling statutes.⁶³ In the absence of directions from the board of trustees or regents,

Purposes for which property used, investment, and final disposal. Generally speaking, college or university funds may be used for any legitimate purpose of the institution, such as construction of buildings.⁶⁵ Proceeds of rentals may, it has been held, be applied by a college or university to construction of a dormitory,⁶⁶ as may also profits realized from operation of a university press.⁶⁷ Under statutes permitting funds to be expended for the "support" of a university, such funds may be used for erection of buildings as well as for current expenses, maintenance, up-keep and continuation of existing functions.⁶⁸ Under applicable charter or statutory provisions colleges and universities have been held authorized to pledge income and interest from a land grant fund to secure a loan for erection of a journalism building, such use of the funds being regarded as in furtherance of the maintenance and perpetuation of the institution within constitutional requirements, and not in violation of constitutional provisions relative to state finances.⁶⁹

While the funds of a college or a university must not be used for the personal and private ends of an individual,⁷⁰ the institution may invest its funds in proper securities,⁷¹ and make a donation of money to a railroad in consideration of the location of the road near the grounds of the institution.⁷² The general rule that a trustee may not invest trust funds in its own obligations is inapplicable to the states in respect of the administration of federal land grant funds for the benefit of land grant colleges.⁷³ A state's acceptance under contract with executors of trust funds created by a will effects a transfer of the specific property to the state as its own, and in such a case it has been held that the state is discharged of its obligations by compliance with the terms of the will in respect of interest at the rate and for the number of years stipulated in the will, a reasonable rate to be paid thereafter, and is not required to account for capital gains or losses.⁷⁴ Where the trust gift is to a specific college, the state university of which such college is a part has no claim on the fund.⁷⁵

The fact that colleges or universities may not use their property for other than educational purposes does not restrict their control or power of disposition of the same.⁷⁶ Subject to statutory restrictions,⁷⁷ a college or university has the power to sell and dispose of property belonging to it for purposes clearly tending to promote its interest and the objects for which it was created,⁷⁸ or to extend a lease of property;⁷⁹ and if it conveys its property for a purpose apparently lawful, and within the scope of its powers, to a bona fide purchaser without notice, the transaction will be valid as between the corporation and the purchaser, even though the secret purpose of the corporation was unlawful.⁸⁰ A purchaser with notice, however, will acquire no greater right than the university had.⁸¹ Provided a restriction is not clearly expressed, the power of disposal may be exercised as to property granted, or acquired with funds given, to the college or university for certain purposes.⁸² Under the legislation of some states, the state land commission, rather than the board of regents, has power to sell university lands, regardless of the method by which title to such lands was acquired.⁸³ Where the lands of a state university have been sold, the university officials not only may,⁸⁴ but must,⁸⁵ enforce the right of a vendor. However, where college lands are required to be sold to provide a fund for the college, arising from the interest on the price, the college may receive the principal when its best interest will be promoted thereby, and its officers will be presumed to have acted bona fide in receiving the principal before maturity with a bonus.⁸⁶

In the absence of objection by the board of directors of a college or university, its lease may be held valid where executed by the business manager pursuant to authority of the executive committee.⁸⁷ The validity of a sublease made by tenants of a university is governed by the terms of the lease rather than by statute.⁸⁸

The deed of a college or university may be upheld despite minor inaccuracies,⁸⁹ and a deed of the president authorized by a new board of trustees, assuming to represent the institution after election under an amended charter without objection by the old board, is valid as against collateral attack although acknowledged before filing of the amended charter.⁹⁰

Under particular charter, constitutional, or statutory provisions, it has been held that commissioners of a sinking fund are not authorized to convey lands held by the state for the use of a state university,⁹¹ or that sinking fund commissioners lack authority to provide funds for reconstruction of a

§ 15. Liabilities

The property of a college or university is liable for its debts. While a private institution is ordinarily responsible for tortious injuries to students or others, a state college or university may be exempted from liability on the theory that it is performing governmental functions and shares the state's exemption from suit.

A university to which is transferred title to college property, building, and equipment purchased by a citizens' committee as trustee is not a successor trustee so as to be liable for the purchase price of the equipment under a statute providing for enforcement of claims against a trust estate, and may not be held liable in a suit for the invoice price of the goods under express contract, although sale of the property by the citizens' committee to the university under the latter's promise to operate a college in the city for which the committee acted is supported by a valuable consideration.⁹⁷

Liability of property for debts. Broadly speaking, all property of a college or university to which it has unconditional title is liable for its debts.⁹⁸ The property of a private corporation conducting a college may be sold for the payment of its debts,⁹⁹ and, where a college corporation becomes insolvent, and ceases to use its property for college purposes, it has power to sell such property to pay its debts, although its charter does not confer such authority.¹

Torts. Generally speaking, a college or university may be held responsible in damages for tortious injuries to its students² or others,³ and it has been held that a university other than a state institution is not a corporation administering governmental activities so as to absolve it from liability for injury to students.⁴ In the case of a state, college,

Malicious expulsion. In an action against a college or university for malicious expulsion of a student, recovery cannot be had for mere error of judgment, but only for error grounded on malice.⁷

§ 16. Governing Boards and Officers

The management of a college or university is ordinarily intrusted to trustees, regents, curators, or a board of state officers.

The affairs of some colleges and universities are managed by a board of trustees,⁸ some by regents,⁹ some by curators,¹⁰ and some by a state board of education.¹¹ In some states, the management of a state agricultural college is intrusted to the state board of agriculture,¹² or to the regents,¹³ or the institution may be governed by regents and a state board of agriculture.¹⁴ According to some statutes vesting the control and management of a university in a board of supervisors, a specified number, less than a majority, may constitute a quorum and take tentative action, but such action does not bind the board unless ratified by it at the next meeting at which a majority of all the members are present.¹⁵ Bouvier Law Dictionary defines "chancellor of a university" as its principal officer, whose office may be for the most part honorary.

§ 17. — Appointment, Removal, and Tenure is controlled by the constitution or statute under which it is conducted.¹⁶ Under a provision that such officers shall be "elected" in a certain manner, persons will not be allowed to assume the duties of such officers unless duly elected;¹⁷ and a curative statute, intended merely to change de facto corporations into de jure corporations, will not be construed to sanction a custom or usage as to the election of trustees, which is contrary to the express terms of a statute.¹⁸ Where, however, a board of regents stands by and allows a succeeding board to assume the duties of the office without question, the succeeding board, although illegally appointed, becomes the de facto board, and the election by it of one of its number as treasurer constitutes him treasurer de jure.¹⁹ When not prohibited by statute, a professor in a college or university may be a trustee thereof.²⁰

The board of regents or other governing body may be given power to remove any officer of the university, when, in its judgment, the interests of the university require it;²¹ and wrongful intent or fraud need not be shown in order to justify the removal of such officer.²² Under statutes authorizing regents to remove any trustee of a corporation created by them for certain causes, a medical college to which the regents had granted the standard form of charter is a corporation created by them so as to entitle them to remove the trustees without formally annulling its prior existing charter.²³ Under some constitutional and statutory provisions a regent of a state university may be removed for cause by the appointing power without a hearing,²⁴ although, under other provisions of law, where it is sought to remove an officer of a college or university for cause, he must be given notice and an opportunity to be heard.²⁵

Certain officers of state colleges and universities have been held not to be "public officers" within the meaning of constitutional provisions relating to the terms and removal of the latter kind of officers.²⁶

Filling vacancies. A statute which authorizes the governor to fill vacancies occurring in the office of trustee of a university does not apply to vacancies arising by the expiration of the trustees' terms of office, but is limited to filling vacancies which arise during a term, by reason of death, removal, or resignation.²⁷

Interest of petitioner not essential

Under L.1920 c 745, amending Education L. § 68, authorizing the regents to remove trustees of corporations created by them, it was not necessary to the validity of the removal of trustees that the petitioner should have some interest in the proceeding, as the regents might take action on their own motion, or

however the information was brought to their attention.—People ex rel. Diffenbach v. Regents of the University of the State of New York, supra.

Statute not retroactive

Where a medical college had parted with all its property and become inactive prior to L.1920 c 745, amending Education L. § 68, authorizing the regents to remove trustees of corporations created by them, the subsequent removal of its trustees because of their failure, subsequent to that act, to maintain the institution did not give a retroactive effect to the statute.—People ex rel. Sufficiency of notice

In the absence of a governing statute or by-law it seems that it will be sufficient if the meeting of trustees is assembled in the mode which has been the customary method employed by the corporation, as by mailing a postal card to each member notifying him of the time and place of the meeting, in which case it will be presumed that the cards so mailed have been received, and, where this procedure has been followed, a professor removed on abolition of his professorship at a trustees' meeting could not successfully claim irregularity of such meeting for lack of notice.—People v. Albany Medical College, 26 Hun 348, reversing 10 Abb.N.Cas. 122, 62 How.Pr. 220, affirmed 89 N.Y. 635.

Secretary, treasurer, and business manager

Even if L.1910 c 114, and L.1912 c 170, did not repeal Code 1906 § 12, relating to the management of Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, appellant, elected secretary, treasurer, and business manager thereof, pursuant to § 12, is not a "public officer" of the state within Const.1890 § 175, providing exclusive method of removing a public officer, the essential distinction between an employment and an office being that in an office the duties and powers are prescribed by law.—McClure v. Whitney, 82 So. 259, 120 Miss. 350.

27. Ala.—State v. Foster, 30 So. 477, 130 Ala. 154.

Terms and holding over. The duration of the term of office of an officer of a college or university is usually fixed by law.²⁸ Some constitutions and statutes of this character, which contain no provisions for holding over, are construed to fix an absolute term, so that, on the expiration of the term of an incumbent, without his successor being chosen, the office becomes vacant;²⁹ yet, where the constitution or statute contains a provision for holding over, a secretary or treasurer continues in office until his successor has been duly elected and qualified, although he has ceased to be a member of the board of regents or other governing body, as he was required to be at the time of his election.³⁰

Denominational university. A statute entitling any religious denomination maintaining or patronizing an educational institution through its representative body to elect its board of directors or trustees is not applicable where a denomination established a university which was afterward practically created by a gift of an individual donor; but such university, by reason of its relations with the denomination, has power to pass by-laws and to enter into agreements relating to the appointment and election of members of its board of trustees, so as to secure fair representation of the church on the board; and where it is agreed that the board of trustees is to make appointments to fill vacancies, subject to confirmation by the church authorities, new members appointed by the board of trustees are entitled to their seats ad interim, until rejected by the church authorities.³¹

§ 18. — Powers, Duties, and Liabilities

- a. In general
- b. Contracts
- c. Authority to bind state
- d. Liabilities

a. In General

The governing board of a college or university is often regarded as a legal entity and has broad power to administer its property and affairs, although the board lacks powers neither expressly conferred nor essentially implied. The governors are under a duty to conduct the institution for the best interests of its students.

In many instances the governing boards of public institutions, such as colleges and universities, are corporations, and, while functioning within the scope of their authority, are not subject to the control or supervision of any other branch or department of the state government, but are regarded as independent legal entities with the general powers ordinarily possessed by such entities;³² and such boards ordinarily have implied power to do everything necessary and convenient to accomplish the objects of the institution and not prohibited by law.³³ It has been held that such a board may construct dormitories on the campus without legislative authority.³⁴ In some cases the functions of such a board affecting the public have been held to be franchises,³⁵ the board having no powers except those which are conferred on it either expressly or by fair implication;³⁶ and in the case of a state college or university, the institution or its governing board has been regarded as a state agency subject to such control as may be specified by law.³⁷ Where the institution is an agency of

Appointment construed as for full term

Where plaintiff was appointed as member of state board of regents in January, 1921, "for term ending January 1, 1927," and governor's message to senate stated that plaintiff was appointed for period ending Jan. 1, 1927, "or when his successor . . . shall have been appointed and have qualified," it was held that appointment was for full term of six years, the quoted clause of message merely referring to Rev.Code 1919 § 5562.—Johnson v. Control of governor

State university was within law subjecting agencies of state government to control of governor through commission of administration and finance.—State v. Chase, supra.

Regulation of method

Under Const. art 9 § 10, giving the board of regents of the state university general supervision of the university its funds, etc., under such the state, the officers thereof are subject to the control of the legislature,³⁸ and particular powers granted them by the legislature may be afterward annulled by that body,³⁹ subject to whatever constitutional limitations may exist.

A religious denomination having relations with a university, but no right of visitation, has no right to veto the action of the board of trustees.⁴⁰

Generally speaking, the authorities of a college or university are under a duty so to conduct the institution that future students will have the benefit of proper facilities in exchange for the fees to be paid by them.⁴¹ Certain duties are expressly imposed on the regents or other officers by the statutes of some states.⁴² Where, however, by constitution or statute, certain matters are placed in the exclusive control of the governing board, or where it has a sound discretion to exercise in the performance of a duty, the court will not interfere unless the delay in the performance of such duty is unnecessary or willful, or unless the acts of the board are subversive of the purposes for which the board was created.⁴³ A duty, imposed by charter, of teaching agriculture and the mechanical arts must be performed, even though the charter is amended so as to permit instruction in all branches;⁴⁴ but, where the institution is established for the purpose of instruction in "the arts and trades and their related sciences," the trustees have a very broad discretion in respect of the particular subjects of instruction.⁴⁵

Power to hold property. It has been held that the regents of a state university hold title to university property in trust for public purposes, the property being regarded as that of the state.⁴⁶

Surrender of assets. As a rule the trustees or other governing body of a college or university lack authority to surrender its assets in discontinuance of the institution,⁴⁷ and a transaction by which the trustees of a medical school, operated in connection with a hospital, undertake to discontinue the college and thereafter to operate only the hospital will be set aside on a showing of bad faith even without proof of immediate financial gain to such trustees.⁴⁸

regulations as may be prescribed by law, the regulations which may be prescribed and must be observed refer to methods and rules for the conduct of its business and accounting to authorized officers, and cannot interfere essentially with the constitutional discretion of the board.—State v. Although Const. art 11 §§ 4, 5 make the regents of the university an independent corporation with power to hold private property for the use of the university and general supervision and control over it, the regents, nevertheless, form a department of the state government created by the constitution to perform state functions, and the real estate acquired is public property belonging to the state, but held by the corporation in trust for the purposes of the university, which are public purposes.—People v. Lack of leave of court

Trustees of theological school, chartered by Act April 7, 1846, P.L. p 497, were not authorized, without dissolution of corporation by leave of court, to deliver school's assets to corporation of another state, although they are self-perpetuating body, and have no stockholders to control them, not being owners of assets, but only trustees to manage them for public good in accordance with purposes specified in charter.—Hempstead v. Meadville Theological School, supra.

Action to set aside not irregular

In action by medical college to set aside as fraudulent certain transfers of real and personal property to hospital operated in connection therewith, and accomplished by trustees through collusive mortgage foreclosure, contention that action was irregular, as a collateral attack on legality of foreclosure, not sustained.—New York Medical College & Hospital for Women v. Dieffenbach, supra.

Rescission of college registration as not barring relief

In action by medical college to set aside as fraudulent transfers of real and personal property to hospital operated in connection therewith by college trustees through a collusive mortgage foreclosure, that college will be unable to carry out its purposes, because its registration as a medical college was rescinded by the University of the State of New York, did not prevent granting of relief, where such action was not taken until after trustees had breached their obligation, and rescission involved no revocation of charter, which was still in effect.—New York Medical College & Hospital for Women v. Dieffenbach, supra.

Contention as to preference unsustainable

In action by medical college to set aside as fraudulent transfers of real and personal property to a hospital operated in connection therewith, and accomplished by trustees through collusive mortgage foreclosure, contention that payment of interest on mortgage would have created a preference, to exclusion of other creditors, was not sustained.—New York Medical College & Hospital for Women v. Dieffenbach, supra.

b. Contracts

The governing body of a college or university has authority to contract for it within the limitations on its power imposed by law, although mere executive officers ordinarily lack power to make such contracts unless specially authorized. The authorities are in conflict respecting the validity of a contract between the college governing board and one of its members.

The governing body of a college or university may make such contracts as are within the limits of the authority conferred on it by charter or statute.⁴⁹

It has been held that a contract between the governing board of a state college or university and one of its own members in relation to the institution is invalid at common law,⁵⁰ although other authority holds that, even a contract made between the trustees, or a committee thereof, and one of their number is valid, in the absence of fraud.⁵¹

Contracts with officers. Contractors dealing with executive officers of a college or university instead of with its trustees or other governing body are generally chargeable with charter limitations on the power of the former.⁵² The bursar of a college or university has no authority to make purchases for the institution except in accordance with a duly approved budget.⁵³ A seller of goods accepting a note of the college signed by the bursar without using ordinary prudence to ascertain the extent of the bursar's authority does so at his own risk,⁵⁴ and the refusal of the institution to pay such a note on demand is a sufficient repudiation of the bursar's unauthorized act in signing the note.⁵⁵ In the absence of proof that the president of the institution had authority to issue binding notes in its name, it

Borrowing money and issuing certificates of indebtedness

Board of supervisors of Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College has power to borrow money and incur debt. It has power to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to issue certificates in repayment thereof for purpose of construction of necessary and useful buildings. Certificates of indebtedness proposed to be issued by such board to provide for construction of necessary and useful buildings were valid. Evidences of indebtedness issued by such board need not be ratified by legislature.—Caldwell Bros. v. Board of Sup'rs of Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, 147 So. 5, 176 La. 825.

Lease

Regents of university system were authorized to lease gymnasias of institutions in system to corporate athletic associations connected respectively with institutions at which such buildings are located.—State v. Regents of University System of Georgia, 175 S.E. 567, 179 Ga. 210.

Loan agreement

Loan agreement made by regents of university system and board of regents with federal government, whereby bonds would be issued by regents and purchased by government to provide funds for stated university uses, bonds to be paid exclusively out of matriculation, laboratory, hospital, and athletic fees, was not illegal, since a mere pledge of income would not be a pledge of "property" and could not result in a sale of "property" within the purview of the statute.—State v. Regents of University System of Georgia, supra.

Contractor's statutory bond

Where contractor failed to give statutory bond, such fact could not be used by him as defense against breach of contract. That contractor failed to obtain bond as required and, in bidding on work, made mistake in calculation, did not justify his refusal to perform.—State v. Scholz, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 661.

Limitations on cost; rights of contractor

Where the trustees of the College of the City of New York, who had been constructing a temporary barracks in accordance with the desires of the war department, after the Armistice, entered into an agreement, with the contractor for completion of the building as a one-story building for a course in vocational subjects, and the cost exceeded one thousand dollars, the contractor cannot enforce payment of warrants; for, under L.1895 c 168 §§ 1, 6, L. 1917 c 786 § 875 subd 8, and Greater New York Charter §§ 149, 419, 1541, it was necessary that such contract be on public notice with competitive bidding and this is so, notwithstanding § 1131, as amended by L.1918 c 583 and § 1132, as amended by L.1916 c 580, relating to acceptance of gifts and the use of funds for vocational students.—People ex rel. cannot be assumed that he had such authority, and, if he lacked such authority, he may not ratify the unauthorized act of the bursar in signing such a note.⁵⁶ Where the by-laws of a college or university do not invest the president with general authority to issue notes but merely designate him as the officer who is to perform the ministerial duty of signing such instruments as may be authorized and required, the corporation is not bound by notes executed by the president for money obtained and used by him for his private purposes without original authority or ratification by the governing board.⁵⁷

Estoppel. A college, having received and retained valuable rights and property under an agreement made by the board of trustees, cannot refuse to pay the price agreed on, on the theory that the board was not authorized to make the agreement.⁵⁸ The doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied, however, against a college where a party, under a contract with the trustees, claims rights and privileges which by the law the college has no right to convey.⁵⁹

Compensation. Where a university athletic association pays in full the portion of an athletic director's salary which it has promised absolutely to pay, the director may not recover from such association an unpaid balance of his total salary, which balance was to be paid by the state board of control over whose actions the university athletic association could not exercise any binding control.⁶⁰

It has been held that the rental value of a house purchased by a city for use of the president of a city college may not be charged as part of the president's compensation.⁶¹

c. Authority to Bind State

The regents or other governing body of a state college or university ordinarily lack power to make contracts binding the state beyond appropriations committed to their control.

Generally speaking the governing body of a state college or university is regarded as a distinct legal entity so far as its debts are concerned and lacks authority to contract indebtedness collectable from the state;⁶² but the state by its conduct after knowledge of the facts may so adopt the board's acts as to waive its right to repudiate the contract.⁶³ If, however, the state merely takes and enjoys the benefit of the execution of the contract, without ratification, it is liable only for the fair and reasonable value of the benefit enjoyed.⁶⁴

The regents or other governing officers of a state university act as agents in behalf of the state, however, when they enter into a contract involving the expenditure of money of the state;⁶⁵ and their authority to bind the state is limited to the amount of the legislative appropriations granted for such purpose.⁶⁶ In some states, the officers of a state university are expressly prohibited by statute from contracting any debt whatever on account of the university without the consent of the legislature previously obtained.⁶⁷

Generally speaking, a college or university officer is not personally liable for the defaults of the institution, nor for his own mistakes of judgment in administration thereof, although he may be held liable for his own positive wrongdoing. Sureties on the bond of a college or university officer are liable for moneys received by him in his official capacity or under color of his office.

Rental not contemplated under statute and custom

pied a house without charge owned by the city of New York it was held, in view of the fact that the statute fixing the salaries of the faculty of the college speaks only of money compensation and that no charge for rent of the house was contemplated when the city purchased it, that the attempt of the city to charge rent as part of the president's compensation could not be permitted.—College of City of New York v. 67. Va.—Phillips v. Commonwealth Univ., 34 S.E. 66, 97 Va. 472, 47 L. R.A. 284.

While the officers of a college or university may not be personally liable for the torts of the institution,⁶⁸ such an officer may, in a proper case, be held responsible for his own wrongdoing, and the immunity of the regents from suit for the negligent conduct of its agents does not operate to exempt the officer or agent himself from liability for his own tort.⁶⁹ Every employee of a university is liable for the misuse of moneys received by him in his fiduciary capacity;⁷⁰ and the receipt of the money by him may be shown by competent testimony fairly tending to prove it, either alone or in connection with other circumstances.⁷¹

A college or university officer may not be held responsible in damages for a mere mistake of judgment in respect of his government of the institution.⁷² The administrative officers of a college or university, while acting within their jurisdiction in discretionary matters, wherein they are given quasi-judicial powers, are not liable in a civil action regardless of the propriety of the motives by which they may be actuated;⁷³ and so long as the governing board exercises its discretionary power to control institutional matters in good faith and for the best interests of the institution as it sees them, no merchant thereby subjected to what in other circumstances might be deemed unfair competition will have a right of action, legal or equitable.⁷⁴

A college or university treasurer is not an insurer of the funds committed to his care, and will not be responsible for loss where he deposits them in accordance with the directions of the governing board of the institution.⁷⁵

In the absence of express authority, no action can be maintained against a state board of administration or its members for wrongful acts committed by a board of regents where the latter board was abolished by statute prior to the time of suit and replaced by a board of administration to which was committed the conduct of the state university.⁷⁶

Bonds of officers. Where required by statute, a college or university officer must execute a bond before entering on his duties.⁷⁷ The surety on the bond of a state college officer has been held liable for moneys received by him under color of office, although statute made another officer the custodian thereof.⁷⁸ Where no statute authorizes the board of regents to make representations as to the state of the treasurer's accounts, the state is not bound to the surety by any such representations made to him by the regents.⁷⁹

§ 19. — Visitors

Under common-law principles the founder of an incorporated college or university has the right of visitation or inspection, and where the right exists the jurisdiction of the visitors covers the internal management of the institution and the courts will not interfere with the decision of visitors in the absence of an abuse of discretion.

According to common-law principles governing eleemosynary corporations generally, the founder of an incorporated college or university has the

§ 20. Faculty, Professors, and Tutors

Where no regulations are prescribed by a higher body, it is within the province of the faculty of a college or university to make rules and regulations for the government of the institution.

Where the matter is not handled by the trustees or regents in control of a college or university, the faculty thereof may make reasonable rules for the government of the institution and in so far as such rules and regulations are neither arbitrarily applied nor in violation of law they are binding on all concerned.⁸⁴ The matter of regulations is considered generally in § 26 below in connection with the government and discipline of the students. Matters relating to the status, appointment, removal, and salary of the faculty, professors, and tutors of a college or university, and to their performance of services beyond the scope of their collegiate duties are treated in §§ 21-23.

A professor has been defined as a public teacher of any science or branch of learning, especially in a university, college, or other seminary.⁸⁵ "Professor" in Immigration Act is defined and construed see Aliens § 89.

A tutor is one who teaches, usually a private instructor.⁸⁶

§ 21. — Status, Appointment, and Removal

Professors in colleges and universities are sometimes regarded as officers thereof, although ordinarily a professor or other teacher is a mere employee. Appointment and removal of members of the faculty is a matter ordinarily resting in the discretion of the college governing board subject to statutory and contract provisions.

Under some statutes or charters a professor in a college or university is deemed an officer thereof, removable only for cause shown and specified in the charter,⁸⁷ although ordinarily a professor is not an officer, but occupies merely a contractual position as an employee.⁸⁸ The board of regents or trustees have power to make a valid contract employing a professor for a stated and reasonable length of time,⁸⁹ although he is subject to removal, before the expiration of such time, for sufficient cause.⁹⁰ In the absence of sufficient cause for his removal, the professor may recover the consequent damages.⁹¹ Although an indefinite hiring at so much per day, or per month, or per year, is a hiring at will and may be terminated by either party at any time by giving notice and no action can be sustained in such case for a wrongful discharge,⁹² yet the terms of the contract, and the consideration therefor, may contemplate that the person employed is to have a professorship permanently, subject to removal for cause.⁹³

It is sometimes provided either by statute or the rules of the institution that the appointee assumes his position subject to removal at the discretion of the governing board.⁹⁴ Such provision becomes a condition of the contract; no notice or hearing is required;⁹⁵ and in the absence of fraud or bad faith, the regents or trustees in discharging a professor before the termination of his contract are not liable for damages for breach thereof;⁹⁶ nor in such a case is the ground of removal a proper subject of judicial investigation.⁹⁷

Delay in appointment. The court will not interfere with the discretionary power of the regents to delay the appointment of a professor, unless there appears to be unnecessary delay or a want of good faith.⁹⁸

Reinstatement. A teacher who has served long enough in a state college to acquire rights of permanent tenure under statute, and who is dismissed without the required statutory hearing, is entitled to be reinstated.⁹⁹

§ 22. — Salary

A professor or instructor may be entitled to salary although not formally employed. The amount of his salary is ordinarily governed by express or implicit provision of contract.

The professors of the clerical universities received no salaries, but were incumbents of ecclesiastical livings.¹ To render a university liable to a professor or an instructor for his salary, it is not necessary that he be formally employed;² and in the absence of an express contract as to the amount of an instructor's salary the amount may be governed by custom,³ or the professor may be limited to the amount regularly paid him despite previous mention of his receiving a larger amount.⁴

The compensation of officers is considered supra in § 18c.

Increase or reduction. A contract for an increase in the compensation of a teacher, who is also a member of the governing board, may be upheld although the teacher in his capacity as trustee joined in the vote for his own increase.⁵ Where a professor agrees to hold his office for a specified term of years, unless permitted to resign, his salary during such time cannot be diminished without his consent.⁶

Term for which salary paid. Where a professor first suffers a vote for his removal by the trustees, which is followed by a decree of removal by the visitors, and subsequently there is a court adjudication sustaining his removal, the actual removal will be deemed to have occurred on the rendering of the decree of the visitors and the professor is entitled to his salary up to, but not beyond, such date.⁷ Where a member of the faculty of a college or university is familiar with provisions of the by-laws placing employment of members in the hands of the trustees and confining their election or contract to a period of one year, he is not entitled to recover for breach of an alleged contract for three years purporting to have been made by the president without evidence of the consent of the board of trustees even if the president falsely represented that he had the trustees' consent.⁸

Emeritus positions and sabbatical leaves. Both by custom and in some instances under statutory authority, the governing board of a college or university may elect members of the faculty to emeritus positions and grant them sabbatical leaves of absence with pay, and such grants have been held not to violate state constitutions as respects the faculty of a state institution.⁹

Enforcement of contract against state. It has been held that a valid and authorized contract between the state department having charge of the state university system and a person for the position of instructor in the university, entered into for a stipulated salary per annum, and having legislative sanction, is enforceable against the state,¹⁰ and in the absence of any provisions in the contract to the contrary, it will be presumed that a new contract made between the regents and an instructor in a college or school formerly under private auspices and then taken over by the state, is to run for the same length of time and that payment of salary is to be made in the same manner as in respect of the old contract.¹¹

§ 23. — Performance of Other Services

In the absence of interference with his regular duties, a professor, instructor, or tutor may as a rule engage in other lucrative work, and by statute faculty members may be required to perform nonacademic duties without compensation other than their regular salaries as members of the faculty of a public institution.

So long as he performs his full duty to the college or university by which he is employed and does not compete with it or act in opposition to its interests, a professor, instructor, or tutor may properly render services for another university,¹² give public concerts,¹³ publish books,¹⁴ and take private pupils.¹⁵

to perform nonacademic services without compensation other than that regularly provided for academic services.¹⁶ Under a statute making it the duty of the faculty of a medical college to visit and attend the patients in an asylum, the faculty are bound to render only so much personal service and advice to the asylum as is consistent with their character as professors and the duties which necessarily attach to their positions.¹⁷

§ 24. Students

The relation between student and college or university is essentially contractual in character. The proper college or university authorities ordinarily have power to select the curriculum to be offered and to designate the courses to be pursued by the students.

One may be a student at a college or university without being matriculated, as where he attends recitations and lectures and is under the government of the institution.¹⁸ The relation of a student to the college or university which he is attending is a contractual one,¹⁹ and the terms of the contract are to be interpreted according to their natural meaning.²⁰

Curriculum. Within the limitations imposed by applicable charter and statutory provisions, the governing board of a college or university has a wide discretion in selecting the courses which are to be given at the institution.²¹ Where the purpose statute constituting the charter of a school of mines designates engineering as one of the courses to be given, the regents may properly include in the curriculum a general and professional course in engineering.²²

Under the provisions of the Morrill Act, a land grant university is bound to offer its students instruction in military tactics, although it remains free to determine details in respect of such matter.²³ The courts have upheld the validity of regulations making military training compulsory in such universities.²⁴

§ 25. — Admission

Admission to a purely private college or university rests in the discretion of the appropriate institutional authorities, although admission to a public or state institution is controlled primarily by the public authorities.

The legislature may properly regulate the conditions on which students may be admitted to a university maintained by the state,²⁵ and under delegated authority and in the reasonable exercise of its discretion the governing body of a state college or university may establish rules as to admission of students.²⁶ Thus the state may require a member of a Greek letter fraternity at another college to renounce his allegiance with such fraternity before admitting him as a student of the state university.²⁷ The right to attend the educational institutions of a state is not a natural right, but is a gift of civilization and a benefaction of the law; if a person seeks to become a beneficiary of this gift, he must submit to such conditions as the law imposes as a condition precedent to this right.²⁸ However, the above rules refer to the power of the legislature to impose conditions; the right of admission to a state university is a right which the trustees or other officers are not authorized to abridge materially, and which they cannot as an abstract proposition rightfully deny;²⁹ for instance, in jurisdictions where there is no statute authorizing or requiring them so to do, the trustees cannot make membership in Greek letter fraternities or other secret societies a disqualification for admission as a student,³⁰ although in these same jurisdictions the trustees may after the admission of persons as students prohibit their connection with such fraternities or societies,³¹ as explained infra § 26.

It has been held that under statute a state is

The first rests upon well established rules, either prescribed by law or sanctioned by usage, from which the right to admission is to be determined. The latter rests largely in the discretion of the officers in charge, the regulations prescribed for that purpose being subject to modification or change from time to time as supposed emergencies may arise."—State v. obligated to afford white and black citizens equal opportunities for higher education.³² The validity of statutes relative to higher education of different races is considered supra § 3.

Private institutions of learning, although incorporated, may select those whom it will receive, and may discriminate by sex, age, proficiency in learning, and otherwise.³³

Vaccination. Where the constitution of the state invests the board of regents of a state university with a large degree of independence and discretion, the board has power to make a rule requiring persons applying for enrollment as students to be vaccinated; and a person so applying is not entitled to avail himself of the provisions of a statute exempting from vaccination persons seeking admission to educational institutions who produce statements in writing from their parents or guardians showing that such parents or guardians are conscientiously opposed to the practice of vaccination and will not consent thereto.³⁴

§ 26. — Government and Discipline

Broadly speaking, the right of a student to attend a public or private college or university is subject to the condition that he comply with its scholastic and disciplinary requirements, and the proper college authorities may in the exercise of a broad discretion formulate and enforce reasonable rules and regulations in both respects. The courts will not interfere in the absence of an abuse of such discretion.

The right to attend a public college or university is subject to proper regulation in the furtherance of discipline,³⁵ and, as respects the scholastic fitness of students to continue their study of courses selected or required, the faculty or teaching body of the institution is the tribunal proper to pass on such matter.³⁶ There is inherent in any college or university a duty on the part of its students to conduct themselves in a manner conducive to the proper administration of the institution.³⁷ The governing board of a college or university ordinarily has power to establish reasonable rules and regulations for the government of the institution committed to its care,³⁸ so long as they do not interfere with some positive right;³⁹ they may make suitable regulations to enforce regulations prescribed by statute,⁴⁰ may place inhibitions and restrictions on matters materially interfering with the proper relation of students to the college or university,⁴¹ and have discretionary power to regulate the discipline of the students in accordance with the rules and regula-

College authorities as in loco parentis

As to mental training, moral and physical discipline, and welfare of the public, college authorities stand in loco parentis, and in their discretion may make any regulation for their government which a parent could make for the same purpose, and so long as such regulations do not violate divine or human law, courts have no authority to interfere.—John B. Stetson University v. Hunt, 102 So. 637, 88 Fla. 510—11 C.J. p 997 note 38 [a].

Effectuating purposes of institution

The managing officers of a state normal college, maintained at the expense of the taxpayers to prepare teachers for public schools, have the power to maintain such discipline as will effectuate the purposes of the institution.—Tanton v. McKenney, 197 N.W. 510, 226 Mich. 245, 33 A.L.R. 1175.

Statute conferring power as still in force

"The act of the Legislature establishing the State Normal School as a branch of the University of Georgia, approved October 21, 1891 (Acts 1890-91, p. 126), conferred upon the board of trustees of that institution authority 'to ordain and establish such rules and by-laws for the regulation of the school and the training and governing of the students, not inconsistent with this act, as in their opinion may be proper to secure the success of said school.' The powers and duties of this board of trustees have not been abrogated or changed by any subsequent act of the Legislature."—Davison-Nicholson Co. v. Pound, 94 S.E. 560, 147 Ga. 447.

The term "government," as used in statutes confiding the government of a state university to trustees, "incorporates a trinity of functions: The enactment of laws, rules, and regulations; the judicial construction of same as applicable to their suggested violation; and their execution. This term 'government' is broad enough in its scope, as applied to a university or college, or school, to include administrative rules and regulations affecting scholastic procedure as well as disciplinary measures affecting only moral conduct or order."—West v. tions made.⁴² Where such rules are made in the exercise of delegated legislative power they have the force and effect of statutes and the board's official interpretation of the rules becomes a part thereof.⁴³ The rules and regulations adopted by the governing board of a college or university are, however, subject to restrictions imposed by law.⁴⁴

While the relation existing between the college or university and the student is contractual, precluding an arbitrary refusal to permit further attendance,⁴⁵ yet the power of suspension or expulsion of students is an attribute of government of educational institutions,⁴⁶ and obviously and of necessity there is implied in the contract a term or condition that the student will obey and conform to the college rules of government and will not be guilty of such misconduct as would be subversive of the discipline of the college or university, or as would show him to be unfit morally to be continued as a member thereof.⁴⁷ It has been stated that the rules of educational institutions supported in whole or in part by appropriations from the public treasury are viewed somewhat more critically by the courts than those of private institutions.⁴⁸

Authority to enforce the rules may be delegated by the governing board of the institution to one of the officers thereof.⁴⁹ Where the regents of a state college have failed to act, the president thereof may make rules for the conduct of the students, such power inhering in his office.⁵⁰

Particular regulations, and particular grounds for suspension or expulsion. Students may be required to procure or be provided with, and to wear, a prescribed uniform,⁵¹ to attend religious exercises unless excused,⁵² to refrain from hazing⁵³ or from entering restaurants or eating houses not controlled by the college.⁵⁴ So the trustees may absolutely prohibit any connection between Greek letter fraternities and the universities, and prohibit the attendance of students at the meetings of such fraternities or other college secret societies, or may prohibit them from having any active connection with them so long as the students remain under the control of the university;⁵⁵ or they may prohibit the students from joining any secret society under pain of expulsion.⁵⁶

The courts have upheld the validity of a regulation reserving to the university the right to dismiss a student at any time for any reason without divulging its reason, the general purpose of the regulation being recited as one to safeguard ideals of scholarship and moral atmosphere, and under a regulation of the latter description, the university does not have the right of arbitrary dismissal, but the reason for its dismissal must fall within the classes specified of preserving ideals of scholarship or moral atmosphere, although the university authorities have a wide discretion in the matter and the courts will be slow to disturb their decision as to dismissal of a student under such a regulation.⁵⁷

A state university may suspend a student for refusal to take its regular course in military training,⁵⁸ a private college or university may under reserved rights in such respect, dismiss a student merely because he is regarded as "undesirable,"⁵⁹ and the courts have upheld the right of expulsion or suspension for a variety of particular causes subversive of the general welfare of the institution.⁶⁰

A student rooming at a dormitory which is an auxiliary of a state college is not to be deemed a tenant or lodger in the technical sense of those terms and he impliedly agrees to conform to reasonable rules for its government during the period of his occupancy.⁶¹

A student wrongfully dismissed is entitled to reinstatement, since an action for breach of contract would not afford adequate relief.⁶³

Obstructing prosecution of war

Refusal of Columbia University to permit one to continue as a student on ground of his public, reported speech, made outside of university, and while the United States was engaged in war, stating that there would be a draft revolution during the war, held justified.—Samson v. Trustees of Columbia University in City of New York, 167 N.Y.S. 202, 101 Misc. 146, affirmed Samson v. Trustees of Columbia University, 167 N.Y.S. 1125, 181 App.Div. 936.

Ringling cowbells, cutting lights, and parading in the halls of the dormitory at forbidden hours is conduct

Boasting of questionable use of knowledge acquired at law school

Where a woman law student boasted to her fellow students of using her legal knowledge acquired at the law school to get free groceries, coal, and involuntary Christmas presents from her husband, from whom she was living apart, and also told them of suits brought against a chief of police for malicious prosecution and slander, and where the master to whom the case was referred found as facts that the conduct of such woman student with reference to large grocery and coal bills which she refused to pay on the theory that the items were "necessities" for which her husband should be billed was not justified, and that the law suits against the police chief could not have been brought in good faith and good conscience, it was held that communication of such episodes to fellow students with the boast that she was using her legal knowledge of such purposes was so far subversive of discipline and injurious to the reputation of the school as to justify it in expelling her.—White v. Portia Law School, 174 N.E. 187, 274 Mass. 162, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 403, 288 U.S. 611, 77 L.Ed. 985.

Girl students

"The maintenance of discipline, the upkeep of the necessary tone and standards of behavior in a body of students in a college, is, of course, a task committed to its faculty and officers; not to the courts. It is a task which demands special experience, and is often one of much delicacy, especially in dealing with girl students; and the officers must, of necessity, be left untrammelled in handling the problems which arise, as their judgment and discretion may dictate, looking to the ends to be accomplished. Only in extraordinary situations can a court of law ever be called upon to step in between students and the officers in charge of them. When it is made clear that an action with respect to a student has been, not an honest exercise of discretion, looking to the proper ends, but beyond the limits of that discretion or arising from some motive extraneous to the purposes committed to that discretion, the courts may be called upon for relief. In such case the officials have, as it is sometimes stated, acted arbitrarily, or abused their discretion; and the courts may be required to remedy that."—Woods v. Simpson, 126 A. 882, 883, 146 Md. 547, 39 A.L.R. 1016.

officers as to these matters is plenary and complete;⁶⁵ and unless such rules and regulations are found to be unauthorized, against common right, or palpably unreasonable, the courts will not annul or revise them;⁶⁶ neither will the courts afford relief in case of the enforcement of such rules, unless those whose duty it is to enforce them act arbitrarily and for fraudulent purposes.⁶⁷ The wisdom of the policy manifested by the rules and regulations is a matter within the discretion of the college authorities and beyond interference by the courts,⁶⁸ and with which except in extraordinary cases the court will not interfere.⁶⁹

Right to hearing. It has been held that a college cannot dismiss a student except on a hearing in accordance with a lawful form of procedure, giving him notice of the charge and an opportunity to hear the testimony against him, to question witnesses, and to rebut the evidence,⁷⁰ although this doctrine has been disapproved by other authority holding that a student may be suspended without a hearing as formal as a court proceeding;⁷¹ and, where the regulations of a privately conducted college receiving no state aid reserve the right to exclude any student regarded as undesirable, the college is not required to prove charges and hold a trial before dismissal of a student whom it regards as undesirable.⁷²

A student must exhaust his recourse before the proper college authorities before resorting to the courts.⁷³

Who entitled to question rules. A person who is not a student or the parent or a guardian of a student is not entitled to complain in the courts of a rule of a private educational institution directed and intended to control only the student body.⁷⁴

§ 27. — Tuition and Charges

The tuition and other charges made to students of a college or university ordinarily depend on the contract of the parties and applicable provisions of statute or constitution. A state institution may charge for tuition and other services where not prohibited by law, and prohibition against a charge to residents for tuition will not preclude a charge for incidental expenses, such as laboratory material.

Where there is no positive prohibition of law, a college or university has the right to furnish instruction free to any student or class of students.⁷⁵ In the absence of constitutional prohibition or limitation, the legislature may provide that a state university shall charge each student prescribed tuition and other fees;⁷⁶ and in the absence of legislative or constitutional prohibition, a state college or university may charge all students for tuition and may exact from them other fees in connection with the running of the institution.⁷⁷ Where there is a prohibition against charges to certain students for "tuition," such prohibition will not preclude the exaction of fees or charges for other items not falling within the meaning of the term "tuition."⁷⁸ Where, however, the statute provides that "admission" to the state university shall be free to residents of the state, the right to charge incidental fees has been denied,⁷⁹ or it has been held that no fee may be exacted as a condition precedent to entrance,⁸⁰ although incidental fees may be charged to students after entrance or admission.⁸¹

Where by agreement with public authorities a university is bound to educate certain students, it is precluded from charging such students a matriculation or registry fee,⁸² but it may charge such free students a laboratory fee to cover material actually used and destroyed by them in laboratory courses.⁸³ An agreement to educate pupils at a certain rate per annum for each pupil is not broken by the college until it has failed or refused to receive pupils on the terms prescribed.⁸⁴

It has been held not an abuse of the discretion vested in the governing body of a public college or university designed to afford free tuition, to require students to occupy new buildings in preference to existing buildings in order that funds may thus be raised to defray the cost of erecting such new buildings.⁸⁵

Contracts. Although a college or university catalogue may be binding as a written contract where the student enters under the terms of the catalogue, there is nothing to prevent the parties from making a contract different from that contemplated by such catalogue,⁸⁶ and where a special contract provides for withdrawal of a student if his health does not permit continuance at the institution, the fact that his health improved during his sojourn there does not preclude recovery of unearned charges where it is found as a fact that he did withdraw for such reasons of health.⁸⁷ Under a contract providing for payment of tuition for the whole college session even in cases where the student is suspended, expelled, or withdraws without cause, where a student withdraws before completion of the session, but there is no proof that his withdrawal was without cause, nor that he was suspended or expelled, the courts will deny the col-

Matriculation, laboratory, hospital, and athletic fees

Prohibition on tuition fees in units of university system was not to prevent board of regents from charging reasonable "matriculation," laboratory, hospital, and athletic fees to students in such institutions.—State

v. Regents of University System of Georgia, 175 S.E. 567, 179 Ga. 210.

Student "union" fee

(1) State board of education was held to have authority without consent of student body to charge student union fee to state university students for purpose of discharging bonded indebtedness on students' union building, notwithstanding legislative provision requiring free "tuition" for resident students.—State ex rel. Veeder v. State Board of Education, 33 P.2d 516, 97 Mont. 121.

(2) Resolution of board of regents of state university requiring payment of fee of two dollars and fifty cents per student each semester for construction, equipment, and maintenance of student union building, and for retirement of bonds issued for construction, as condition precedent to admission, was not illegal as charge for "tuition."—Rheam v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 18 P.2d 535, 161 Okl. 268.

Wide circulation of catalogue as immaterial

College, irrespective of how widely circulated its catalogue or written terms and regulations were, and however well known by persons contemplating patronizing the school, might make binding special or conditional verbal contract with parent for entrance of his child, providing that, if child's health did not permit him to remain in college, he could withdraw without costing parent full session tuition and board.—Texas Military College v. Taylor, supra.

87. Tex.—Texas Military College v. Taylor, supra.

lege the right to collect for the whole session.⁸⁸

Mere recital in a statute that counties may send a certain number of pupils to the state university free of tuition, in consideration of taxes levied by the state and paid by the counties, does not constitute a contract binding on either the counties or the state.⁸⁹

Payment. The payment to a college of its own stock for tuition is valid if made while the institution is solvent.⁹⁰

Obligations of surety. Sureties signing a general bond to be responsible for payment by a student of his expenses may be held by the college or university in respect of an unpaid charge for a room, even though such room was not assigned to the student before he entered the institution.⁹¹

Colleges and universities may properly bind themselves to pay scholarships in accordance with contractual agreements with their founders. One awarded a scholarship may recover damages for breach of the obligation to afford him its benefits. Subject to contractual or statutory requirements, award of scholarship rests in the sound discretion of the college authorities.

Under its general and implied powers the corporation may receive contributions to an endowment fund and may bind the college to furnish tuition therefor to one or more students perpetually,⁹² even in another educational institution than its own.⁹³ A certificate of a permanent and perpetual scholarship in a college is a valid contract⁹⁴ to which no restrictive conditions can subsequently be annexed,⁹⁵ and on the breach of which the holder is entitled to recover the value of the scholarship with interest.⁹⁶ In an action to enforce a subscription made in consideration of such a scholarship, however, defendant cannot avoid his liability on the ground of a mere change in the means of effecting the general purposes of the institution,⁹⁷ that the prosperity of the institution had failed to fulfill defendant's expectation,⁹⁸ or that tuition had subsequently been made free.⁹⁹

While in some states statutes providing free scholarships in the state university for those students who are financially unable to obtain an education otherwise have been considered unconstitutional,¹ in other states, or at least as to some universities in those states, under the act incorporating the university, or under other statute, county or city boards have the right to send scholars for free tuition.² It has been held that such students may be sent to any department of the university.³

The statutes of the particular state must be consulted in order to determine who are eligible to receive scholarships in state universities as will more particularly appear from an examination of the authorities referred to in the note below.⁴

Where an award of a scholarship to applicant first on the list of those examined is invalidated because of failure to fulfill residence requirements, the committee in charge may properly award it to the second on the list as of the year in question although the actual award is made after a subsequent examination in which another was first.⁵

Construction of bond

Where defendants executed bond to a college, conditioned on payment by a prospective student of any sum becoming due it, including all sums for board and gas, together with such as might be charged him for rent of any room assigned to him, in accordance with his application, and before he becomes a student, and he entered in 1903, and in 1906 contracted for a room for the next year, but failed to return, the sureties were liable for the rent, the college having made reasonable effort to rent it to others and a contention that they would not be liable because it was not assigned before he entered was untenable, a fair construction of the bond imposing liability for any room which might be assigned him in accordance with his application to become a student.—President and Fellows of Harvard College v. Kempner, supra.

College entrance diplomas. Under governing statutes it has been held that regents to whom matters relating to admission to college on scholarship have been delegated may so amend their rules as to require application for a college entrance diploma, prerequisite to award of the scholarship, to be made within a specified period,⁶ and where the legislature has conferred upon another body, such as regents, the power to legislate or make rules on a particular subject, such as award of scholarships, the courts will not inquire into the reasonableness of the rules adopted in the exercise of the power conferred.⁷

§ 29. — Credit

The courts have upheld the validity of statutes forbidding extension of credit to minor students without consent of their parents.

In several states statutes have been enacted providing that credit shall not be given to students under age without the consent of their parents or guardians, or to undergraduates without the consent of officers appointed by the college authorities, or against the college rules. Such statutes are not unconstitutional;⁸ but it is requisite to their enforcement that the rules shall have been established and that some officer shall have been authorized to give or withhold consent as the circumstances may require.⁹

§ 30. Dissolution or Abandonment

§ 31. — By Legislative Act

A state college or university is generally subject to dissolution by act of the legislature, and an act transferring the property of a private incorporated college to another institution may operate as a dissolution of the former.

State universities and colleges, being public corporations, are subject to dissolution by an act of the legislature.¹⁰ A statute creating a state board as a corporate body and conferring on it the control and management of a state college leaves the latter without any corporate function to perform, and thus in legal contemplation destroys the corporate existence of such college.¹¹

A legislative enactment which transferred the property of a private incorporated college to a university has been held to operate as a de facto dissolution of the former, since it destroyed the only function which it could perform.¹²

§ 32. — By Surrender of Charter

In the discretion of the proper college or university authorities, a private institution may dissolve itself by surrender of its franchise and acceptance of such surrender by the state.

A college or university corporation may dissolve itself by a voluntary surrender of its franchise¹³ and an acceptance thereof by the state.¹⁴ The power to decide on the advisability of such a voluntary dissolution has been held to reside in the president and trustees.¹⁵

§ 33. — By Transfer of Property and Franchises

Voluntary transfer of its property and franchises by a college or university to another institution operates as a dissolution.

Both at common law and under statute, an educational corporation terminates its existence by a voluntary transfer of all its corporate property and franchises to another corporation or society.¹⁶

§ 34. — By Forfeiture of Charter for Misuser or Nonuser

The charter of a college or university may be forfeited for misuser or nonuser of its franchises, but will not be forfeited for acts falling short of clear misuser or nonuser.

Private incorporated colleges and universities may be dissolved by abandonment of the objects of incorporation through misuser or nonuser of their franchises,¹⁷ and it has been held that acts

If the passage of Acts 1907 p 357, and omissions of its officers are imputable to a college or university so far as forfeiture of its charter is concerned.¹⁸ However, dissolution will not be effected nor decreed by or for acts or omissions falling short of a clear misuser or nonuser,¹⁹ and it has been held that a college or university cannot actually be dissolved until so judged and determined either by judicial sentence or by sovereign power.²⁰

Failure to maintain a "reputable" institution is a factor for consideration in determining whether or not the charter of a college or university should be forfeited.²¹

Waiver of forfeiture. The legislature may, by statute, waive a forfeiture by nonuser.²²

§ 35. — By War

It was held that colleges incorporated under charter from the British crown were not dissolved by the Revolution.

Private colleges founded and incorporated before the Revolution under charters from the British crown were not dissolved by the Revolution.²³

§ 36. — Disposition of Property on Dissolution or Other Termination

Subject to rules governing escheat, which are treated elsewhere, on dissolution of a college or university its property ordinarily reverts to the original donors thereof.

Where an incorporated educational institution is dissolved or ceases to exist, property or funds donated or contributed revert to, and are distributed among, the donors or contributors²⁴ rather than among the stockholders²⁵ or religious organizations sponsoring the institution.²⁶ school to public detriment, justifying dissolution of school.—State ex inf. Otto v. Kansas City College of Medicine and Surgery, 285 S.W. 980, 984, 315 Mo. 101, 46 A.L.R. 1472.

Failure to maintain institution

A failure for several years to maintain an institution of learning, a sale and removal of its buildings, and an attempt to transfer all its land, in the absence of any evidence that further effort would be made to establish a college, have been held sufficient grounds for forfeiture of its charter.—Edgar Collegiate Inst. v. People, 32 N.E. 494, 142 Ill. 363—11 C.J. p 1000 note 98.

Fraudulent exercise of a power to confer degrees is such a misuser of its franchise as will justify the dissolution of an educational institution.—State ex inf. Otto v. § 37. Actions

Questions relating to actions by or against a college or university are considered in the following sections 38-44.

§ 38. — Right of Action and Defenses

Broadly speaking, existence of a right of action against a college or university for tort or contract depends on the particular circumstances as considered in the light of the public or private character of the institution and its charitable or noncharitable status.

Where a particular college or university is not such an institution as to come within the rules exempting charitable corporations from liability for torts, or where the jurisdiction is one in which such rules do not obtain, as considered in Charities §§ 2, 75, the college or university is subject to the same rule of liability for the negligent conduct of its servants as any other private corporation,²⁷ and the liability of state and private colleges and universities for the torts of their students and agents is considered in § 15 supra.

Contractors have been denied the right to recover from a state university for breach of contract to construct a dormitory where there were no funds available for meeting such claim.²⁸

28. Md.—University of Maryland v. Maas, 197 A. 123.

Concerning appropriations

The state university is a state agency under statute and, although university has been rendered liable to suit by statute, contractors could not maintain action against university for breach of contract to construct dormitory, in view of facts that university has only such funds as are appropriated for its use by legislature to be distributed by state comptroller and treasurer for definite purposes and that university has no authority in itself to raise money for payment of damages. Contractors could not recover from state university for breach of contract to construct dormitory on ground that legislature had made appropriation for construction to be paid out of federal and state funds in hand and that there was money available to pay contractors' claim, where dormitory had been completed, university had no money of its own with which to make payments or pay a judgment, and contractors offered no evidence to substantiate their contentions, since money was impressed with a trust for public use, and it could be inferred that it had been expended for constructing dormitory.—University of Maryland v. Maas, supra.

Adjoining landowner. It has been held that an adjoining landowner cannot individually enjoin a college from use of its land in a manner exceeding its corporate powers unless such use amounts to a public nuisance.³⁰

§ 39. — Nature and Form of Action

General rules control the nature and form of an action by or against a college or university.

Where a state auditor has certified an appropriation for a university as reduced by the governor after increased items have passed the legislature by the vote required to make them law irrespective of the governor's disapproval, the institutional authorities may have equitable relief.³¹

Injunction and not quo warranto is the proper remedy where the trustees of a college or university exceed their powers by extending the course of instruction beyond that authorized by the founders.³²

§ 40. — Conditions Precedent

It has been held that an action begun by a state university through private attorneys in violation of a statute and not at a board meeting, to employ certain person as president of the school, where plaintiff alleged and defendant conceded that the alleged contract was void, where the real purpose was to prevent the trustees from engaging such person as president, and no member of the board of trustees was complaining, and where for aught the record showed each trustee, when convened in regular board session, would discharge his duty, would be denied.—*Platt v. requiring consent of the attorney general will not be dismissed.

A statute forbidding the employment of counsel by a state institution without the consent of the attorney general does not require the dismissal of an action brought by a state university through private attorneys.³³

§ 41. — Jurisdiction and Venue

Regular trial courts ordinarily have jurisdiction of actions against colleges.

The ordinary trial courts have jurisdiction of actions against colleges and universities, or against an incorporated board of regents.³⁴

§ 42. — Parties, Process, and Appearance

a. In general

b. Appearance

a. In General

A college or university, or its governing board, may ordinarily sue and be sued if having a corporate existence, but not otherwise.

A college or university, or a branch or department thereof, cannot sue or be sued as such, unless it has in fact a corporate existence,³⁵ and it cannot be sued, in the absence of statutory authority, where it is a public or a quasi-public corporation and a mere agent of the state;³⁶ but acts vesting rights of property of a university corporation in the state, or constituting it one of the departments of a state university, will not take away the rights of the corporation to prosecute suits then pending,³⁷ or impair the right of its creditors.³⁸

Under its charter or act of incorporation, a college or university, or the trustees, directors, or regents as a body corporate, may have capacity to sue and to be sued,³⁹ and this, although no legislative appropriation of funds has been made to meet the claim on which the action was based, the board being entitled to satisfy a judgment against it, if rendered, out of any funds not otherwise specifically appropriated;⁴⁰ and a college duly incorporated may maintain an action on an account due it, although not expressly authorized by its charter to collect such accounts.⁴¹ Where a college or university is a corporate entity capable of suing or being sued, a suit may not be maintained, on an obligation payable to the corporate entity, in the name of its trustees without an assignment.⁴²

A change of name by authority of the legislature will authorize suit in the new name on debts to the original institution.⁴³ One board of management succeeding to another succeeds to its debts and liabilities, and may not only be sued therefor,⁴⁴ but may defend pending actions instituted against the former board.⁴⁵ Trustees may sue by their corporate title without setting out their individual names,⁴⁶ although, where there is neither a setting out of the names of the individuals, nor an allegation of incorporation, no suit may be maintained in the name of the governing board of a college or university.⁴⁷ The trustees of a university are necessary parties in an action to enjoin the giving of instruction on particular subjects in the university;⁴⁸ but, where a state or territory is proceeding under statute to acquire title to lands for the use and benefit of a state university, it may sue without joining the university or the board of regents thereof.⁴⁹

On the consolidation of two colleges the new corporation acquires the right to sue in its own name, provided both colleges accept the act of consolidation,⁵⁰ and the right to sue is extinguished as regards the original corporations.⁵¹

b. Appearance

The court may authorize an attorney to appear for a defendant college or university at the request of some of its trustees, without formal authorization by the board.

The court in which an action against an educational institution is pending may authorize an attorney to appear for such defendant, at the request of some of its trustees, although the board of trustees had not authorized such appearance, as the trustees have no greater pecuniary interest than the public.⁵²

§ 43. — Pleading and Evidence

General rules governing pleading and evidence apply in actions by or against a college or university. The complaint should allege facts sufficient to show a cause of action, and the plaintiff has the burden of proving his case.

Pleading. General rules control pleadings in actions by or against a college or university.⁵³ The complaint in an action to cancel a subscription to stock in a university on the ground that the university was to be located at a particular place must allege that the subscription contained that condition, or that the agent who obtained the subscription on that representation was authorized to make such representation.⁵⁴ Where a stock certificate entitles the holder to tuition in the university to a specified amount per annum for each pupil, the complaint in an action to recover the stipulated amount must allege that the university has failed or refused to permit plaintiff to send pupils to the university on the terms prescribed, or that it has put it out of its power to pay him any tuition fees as contemplated.⁵⁵ An averment that the change of name of a university, authorized by an act of the legislature, was made by vote of a majority of the board of directors within the limited time is sufficient, in an action by the university, without alleging who the directors were, how many voted for the change, or whether it was made at a regular or special meeting.⁵⁶

Evidence. The burden rests on a dismissed student, suing for breach of contract resulting from his matriculation in a university, to prove the breach by showing that dismissal was not for a reason within the terms of a rule of the university constituting part of the contract.⁵⁷ The court will indulge every presumption in favor of the good faith of the university.⁵⁸ A defense of fraud must be proved.⁵⁹

53. Ill.—McClintock v. Lake Forest University, 222 Ill.App. 468.

Construction of complaint

Complaint in malpractice case against board of regents of University of California held to establish fact that defendant, in operation of infirmary, did not conduct a private and proprietary enterprise, but that infirmary was department conducted as educational and public activity.—Davie v. Board of Regents, University of California, 227 P. 243, 66 Cal. App. 693.

Demurrer

(1) Complaint which alleged that athletic director was employed at annual salary of four thousand five hundred dollars of which one thousand five hundred dollars was to be paid by university, and remaining three thousand dollars was to be procured from state, did not state cause of action for balance of three thousand dollars unpaid, since promise to pay four thousand five hundred dollars was contingent upon action of state, over whom university had no control.—Boyd v. University Athletic Ass'n, 157 So. 576, 113 Fla. 188.

(2) In medical college's action on note, answer admitting its execution, but alleging total failure of consideration in that defendant's dental instruments required to be kept in college building were destroyed when it was burned through college's negligence, etc., was properly stricken on general demurrer, and court did not err in awarding judgment against him.—Albright v. University School of Medicine, 91 S.E. 921, 19 Ga.App. 525.

54. Ky.—Stagg v. State Univ., 3 Ky. Op. 451.

58. Fla.—John B. Stetson University v. Hunt, 102 So. 637, 88 Fla. 510.

Action for malicious expulsion

In action against an institution of learning for malicious expulsion, the court will indulge every presumption in favor of the school authorities, to the extent that, in suspending or expelling plaintiff, they acted in good faith for the best interests of the school and the pupils as they saw it.—John B. Stetson University v. Hunt, supra.

59. Action for tuition

In action by a college for tuition where defense was fraudulent representations of plaintiff, the alleged false representations and reliance on them must be proved.—Blumer College of Natureopathy v. Nelson, 114 A. 115, 96 Conn. 372.

General rules governing admissibility of evidence apply in actions by or against a college or university.⁶⁰ Testimony that male students and professors smoked has been held inadmissible in suit by a female student to secure readmission after her expulsion for smoking;⁶¹ and, in a suit by a student to compel a college to confer a degree on him, pictures purporting to show the college graduating class and a statement clipped from a newspaper are not competent evidence.⁶²

The weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions of this character is subject to the general rules controlling such matters.⁶³

§ 44. — Trial, Judgment, and Review

General rules control as respects trial, judgment, and review in actions by or against a college or university. Where a state university lacks funds available for payment of a judgment, provision is sometimes made for suit by the judgment creditor for a recommendatory judgment to the legislature.

Questions of fact arising in actions by or against colleges or universities are for the jury or trial judge,⁶⁴ and a nonsuit should not be granted where there is a controverted question of fact for decision.⁶⁵ A verdict may be directed in a proper case,⁶⁶ and dismissal of the complaint on the merits is proper on a finding that a college sued for personal injuries was not negligent.⁶⁷

General rules govern as respects sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict.⁶⁸

A judgment, in a suit by or against a college, should not be rendered individually against the members of a college committee, who were agents only in making the contract in question.⁶⁹

Recommendatory judgment. Under constitutional provisions, it has been held that where a board of regents of a state university has no money out of which to pay a judgment obtained against it, the judgment creditor must sue on such judgment in the supreme court and ask for a recommendatory judgment to the legislature.⁷⁰

60. Ga.—Horton v. Oglethorpe University, 114 S.E. 910, 29 Ga.App. 287.

Instigation of suit by competitive schools

Evidence that suit in nature of quo warranto against university, teaching drugless healing, for forfeiture of corporate rights, was instigated by competitive schools, held properly refused.—State v. American University of Sanipractic, 250 P. 52, 140 Wash. 625.

62. Or.—Tate v. North Pac. College, 140 P. 743, 70 Or. 160.
11 C.J. p 1002 note 41.

63. Creation of trust

Evidence held not to show intention to create trust on part of either regents or donor of money used to build dormitory at State University.—Splawn v. Woodard, Tex.Civ.App., 287 S.W. 677.

Reservation of rooms

Evidence, showing only arrangement between students and dormitory hall manager at university for reservation of rooms at dormitory terminable at will of either party, held not to show contract with university.—Splawn v. Woodard, supra.

Special contract

In suit on notes for tuition and board of defendant's son at college, evidence held to warrant finding that defendant's son entered college under special contract that, if son's health would not permit him to remain there, he might withdraw without costing defendant full session tuition and board.—Texas Military College v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 275 S.W. 1089.

64. S.C.—Guignard Brick Works v. Allen University, 152 S.E. 707, 155 S.C. 507.

Condition of walk

Whether ice on walk to main entrance of university building was sanded when plaintiff slipped while on her way to visit patient in building during prescribed visiting hour, held for jury, and even though jury accepted as true evidence that university provided employees to report condition of walk and to sand it, jury was required to determine what employees did or failed to do, whether they did what a reasonably prudent man would have done under the circumstances, and whether university was negligent and liable to plaintiff.—Lisa v. Yale University, 191 A. 346, 122 Conn. 646.

65. Application of rules to plaintiff

Granting nonsuit in action by a coach for alleged breach of contract because plaintiff violated rules governing college dormitory of which he was proctor held error where it was controverted whether rules applied to plaintiff.—Newberry v. Upsala College, 147 A. 383, 105 N.J.Law 638.

66. Injuries to student

Directed verdict for college trustees, sued for injuries to student jumping from burning building, held proper under evidence.—Ettlinger v. Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, C.C.A.Va., 31 F.2d 869.

67. Fall of metal lockers

In action against women's college for injuries allegedly sustained by plaintiff when certain metal lockers, owned and maintained by the college, fell and struck plaintiff, dismissing complaint on merits on finding that college was not negligent was justified.—Christie v. St. Joseph's College for Women, 300 N.Y.S. 67.

68. Ill.—McClintock v. Lake Forest University, 222 Ill.App. 468.

In parent's action to recover tuition and board money following expulsion of son, verdict for plaintiff sustained.—McClintock v. Lake Forest University, supra.
